"You will notice here that ours is a great improvement over the American plan. In America they give the bodies of executed criminals to their friends, who as likely as not, make a hero of him, and bury him with pomp. But these scoundrels dread being buried away in this alley almost as much as they dread the gallows. This is a chief part of their punishment.

The lady having suggested that execution was quite enough, the warder replied: "Not a bit of it. I was showing our place the other day to a remarkably intelligent American, who admired our arrangements exceedingly, only he thought we were too lenient. The gentleman said that the great mistake in America was leniency. 'Would you believe it,' said he, 'we caught a rascal in America the other day whom we ought immediately to have burned, and we only hung him. But we are coming to our senses, and are now making arrangements to burn certain men, for whom the gallows is too good."

"Will thee be good enough to tell me the name of the American gentleman who made that remark to thee?" said the Quakeress.

"Ah, yes," said the warder reflectively; "let me see—It was a Mr. Mark Twain."

The lady gave a smile of relief and went off. I am happy to say that Mr. Mark Twain is now at the Langham Hotel, busily at work on a book about the English, wherein, I venture to predict, he will give a readable account of his conversation at Newgate, of which I have been able to report only one sentence.

Railway Duties.

There are many passenger duties which are not merely not obnoxious, but are eminently proper; and yet how many persons travel constantly by railway without giving them a thought. By way of useful admonition, let us specify a few:

There is, first of all, the duty of not pushing at the pay-place, especially if ladies chance to be in front of you.

There nextly is the duty of coming there provided with the proper ready money, so as not to keep folks waiting while you change a five-dollar bill.

There moreover, is the duty of abstention from piling up your hat-boxes and handbags and wraps in the umbrella net so as to risk their tumbling on your neighbor's head.

There is the duty of not quarrelling about an open window, but of conceding the command of it to the sitter next it, facing toward the engine, who by long acknowledged justice, clearly has the right.

There is the duty of obedience to the law respecting trespass, which prohibits the removal of a coat or an umbrella, marking the retention of a vacated seat.

There is the duty of shutting the door gently when you quit the train at a way-station, and neither slamming it with a bang nor leaving it wide open, as is done by selfish and ungentlemanly snobs.

There is the duty of sharing your newspaper with any one who has none, and offering first the leaders, and not the outside sheet.

There is the duty of not putting your dirty boots upon the cushions when you wish to lay your legs up.

There is the duty of opening the car door for any lady leaving or entering the train, even at the risk of soiling your new gloves.

There is reciprocally the duty on the lady's part to smile her gratitude, at least, if she does not verbally express it.

There is the duty of never eating peppermint, or using scents or drinks which have a nauseous odor.

There is the duty of abstaining from bothering your neighbors with remarks about the weather, or platitudinarianisms upon things in general.

There is the duty of not snoring when you are in company, and pursuing a night journey.

And there is, finally, the duty of remembering that delays are dangerous, especially on railways; and therefore of never keeping the train waiting while you fumble in your pockets for your ticket, which you ought to have in readiness to be produced at any moment.

—A farmer gives this bit of advice, which contains a good hint: "If you want the boys to stay on the farm, do not bear on too hard when the boy is turning the grindstone."

Musical Burglar.

Mr. Fred. Fox, of Bridgeport, Ct., was awakened early one morning not long ago by the sound of a guitar, which hung near his room. At the same time the mother-in-law of Mr. Fox, whose apartment is near his, called out that the rats were in the dining room, and, procuring a light, repaired to that room and observed a man in one corner. She gave a scream, went out and closed the door. This brought Mr. Fox to the hall, and, with revolver in hand, he rushed to the office, threw up a window and saw a man running from the house only a short distance away. He fired, and, as he did so, he heard an exclamation and an oath from the burglar. Mr. Fox soon went out, but did not see him again. It is supposed the man, in feeling his way along in the room, ran his fingers across the guitar, and hence the music.

—The Utica Herald says men will never know what effect it would have upon Job if eleven little girls had called upon him, one after another, and tried to sell him Sunday-school picnic tickets.

—At a hotel table one boarder remarked to his neighbor: "This must be a healthy place for chickens." "Why?" asked the other. "Because I never see any dead ones hereabouts."

For General Debility, the good effects of the VEGETINE are realized immediately after commencing to take it.

New Life for the Languid.

Perfect health is vouchsafed to few. Probably ninety people out of every hundred who call themselves healthy have their "turns" of languor, exhaustion, depression of spirits and bodily pain. At these times a wineglassful of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is as refreshing as "the shadow of a rock in a weary land." It invigorates and rests the system and cheers the mind. The effect of the Bitters in cases of nervous debility, produced either by undue physical exertion, over-study, intense anxiety, or any other cause, is wonderfully reviving and invigorating. In fact, this healthful vegetable restorative possesses medicinal properties which entitle it to the rank of an article of prime necessity, and it should be kept on hand in every dwelling, and promptly taken as a remedy for all the minor ailments as well as for more serious complaints.

Liberality of Physicians.

It has always been said that physicians would dispense any remedy, however valuable, which they did not originate themselves. This has been disproved by their liberal course toward J. C. AYER's preparations. They have adopted them into general use in their practice, which shows a willingness to countenance articles that have intrinsic merits which deserve their attention. This does the learned profession great credit, and effectually contradicts the prevalent erroneous notion that their opposition to proprietary remedies is based in their interest to discard them. We have always had confidence in the honorable motives of our medical men, and are glad to find it sustained by the liberal welcome they accord to such remedies as AYER & Co.'s inimitable remedies, even though they are not ordered in the books, but are made known to the people through the newspapers.—[New Orleans Delta.]

COAL.

HAVING contracted for a quantity of the above coal, we would call the attention of Manufacturers, Dealers and Consumers to the following different grades mined and controlled by the Company:

HARD WHITE ASH COAL,
FREE BURNING WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN RED ASH COAL,
NORTH FRANKLIN COAL,
LYKENS VALLEY COAL.

In order that all coal shall be shipped in good order, a most rigid system of inspection, both at the mines and at the shipping ports, will at all times be enforced. In every district of the coal region there will be appointed a number of competent persons skilled in the preparation of coal, as local inspectors, whose duty it will be to visit the several collieries daily to see that a proper force is at all times employed in removing slate, and to prevent, if possible, any coal being sent from the mines in bad order. In addition to these efforts at prevention, no means will be left untried at the shipping ports to cure the evils of careless preparation. At Schuylkill Haven, Port Clinton and Port Richmond, ALL COAL WILL BE SUBJECTED TO THE PERSONAL EXAMINATION OF A SKILLED INSPECTOR BEFORE IT IS SHIPPED, and if condemned by him, will be dumped in places provided for the purpose, and before being loaded into vessels WILL BE THOROUGHLY REPICKED AND CLEANED BY HAND.

Local Matters.

Man Drowned.

Shortly after 11 o'clock, Wednesday, James Palmer and Thomas Mead endeavored to row up town in a punt from Gerrish's island, where they were employed on the fortifications. A heavy sea was running and the tide was setting up strong. Palmer was rowing the boat, which shipped considerable water as it lay broadside to the waves. He asked Mead if he could swim, and was answered in the affirmative. Having nothing to bail with, Mead used his hat, but the boat was soon filled by a heavy sea and capsized. Instead of clinging to it, as it would not sink, the men swam away from it. Palmer toward Newcastle and Mead in the direction of a schooner, whose crew came to his rescue in a launch and saved him just as he was uncomfortably full of water. Palmer, who was about fifty years old, sank before he could be reached. Mr. Mead says when he saw him last he was swimming. He came here in U. S. S. Plymouth and was to return in about a month to Portsmouth, England, wherehe had a mother and four or five sisters.

A Much Needed Improvement.

The re-building of the wall at the Daniel street navy yard landing is nearly finished, and presents a great contrast to the old stone work, looking handsome as well as durable. The erection of a suitable building for a waiting room is soon to be commenced, and when finished, the landing and its connections will prove a great accommodation to that portion of the public who visit the Navy Yard by steamer.

The work of building the wall was done by the United States government and the city of Portsmouth jointly, under the supervision of Mr. Andrew J. Locke. Considering the disadvantages under which the work was done we think Mr. Locke entitled to much credit for the manner in which he has forwarded the job. Mr. A. W. Odiorne is to build the waiting-room.

A Stranger's Observations.

A stranger recently visiting Portsmouth was asked by a lady what impressed him most, during his stay at their old and beautiful city.

"I was most and much impressed," was the reply, "with the fast and careless driving of the grocers' wagons. Yes," he added, "and with the merciless overdriving of poor horses as well as the wanton driving of fast ones, which in narrow and peopled streets is both a danger and a nuisance."

The lady concluded to ask no more questions.

Laconics.

Chief Engineer D. B. Macomb is ordered to duty at this naval station.

The term of Mr. A. Pearson's juvenile singing school will commence next Saturday afternoon at 2.30.

The San Francisco Bulletin of Sept. 29th announces the death of Capt. John H. Briard, a native of Kittery, master of bark Galveston, bound from Shanghae to San Francisco. He died at sea.

All who have read Mr. Francis S. Smith's story in the New York Weekly will want to see "Little Sunshine" in Bartley T. Campbell's dramatization of it, to-morrow evening, by Charlie and Lillie Wilkinson, assisted by a good company.

Tuesday night the city watchmen discovered fire in the slipper factory, corner of Washington and State streets. The floor was burned through. The fire is said to have caught from an ash pan of coals placed near an oil cask. Mr. Arami Davis was called and extinguished the fire.

The temperance men opened the campaign, Wednesday evening, by appointing a committee to consider the expediency of enforcing the law relative to letting buildings to be used as dram-shops. The meeting was well attended, and Dr. Norton and others made spirited addresses.

Now that the city fathers have taken hold of the water question, we would suggest that they improve matters in regard to street lamps, also, by ordering that the gas be lighted on dark and cloudy evenings, regardless of the rising or setting of the moon. It is absurd to have the streets darkened before eleven o'clock, P. M.

To-day the Eastern Railroad managers will run a special train from Boston to Portland and back, for the purpose of thoroughly testing the principle of ventilating cars by a new and highly important process of deflecting the air. The inventor will be present to explain his new theory, and to demonstrate the same by chemical tests and interesting experiments. The train will leave Boston at 9 A. M., and returning leave Portland at 3 P. M.

Bailey's Escape from a Water Cooler.

Editor Harding of the Pittsfield Eagle, has learned of Bailey's remarkable escape from a water cooler in Chicago, and tells it thusly:

Bailey, of the Danbury News, has just returned from a western tour. He has seen the burnt district of Chicago, looked over George Francis Train's possessions in Omaha, chatted with the Mormons at Salt Lake City, and walked the golden streets of San Francisco.

He had many adventures, of which he tells, but we have not seen recorded his narrow escape from a water cooler, at a hotel he stopped at. He was shown to his room on the third floor, about 10 o'clock, cracked a joke with the porter and dismissed him in convulsions of laughter, locked his door, wound up his watch, slipped off his garments, turned down the gas, and was dozing in less than half an hour.

But it was a strange bed and a strange place, and he slept only by fits and starts, and upon waking up for the tenth time, about midnight, he found himself thirsty. He wanted a good pull at a pitcher of water to wash down the dust and cinders that had filtered through his moustache during the day's whirling through the dry country on an express train, and the more he thought about it the more necessary it seemed that he must have the draught or perish. All he had to do was to go to the corner of his room, and touch the faucet and draw off all Lake Michigan if he wanted to; but he tried it and found the water warm, and tasting of lead pipes, cockroaches, sinks and other things, and he spit out the first mouthful in disgust.

Then he remembered that in coming up stairs he had noticed on a shelf in the corner of the hall, two floors below his room, a capacious water cooler, and he recollected thinking at the time that it was an excellent thing in the proprietor to be so thoughtful of the wants of his guests. The longer his mind dwelt on that water cooler, the more he wanted a drink from it. There was, undoubtedly, great lumps of ice in it, and the water was probably as cold and sparkling as water possibly could be, and—well he determined to try it, for his thirst had grown intolerable almost.

It was after midnight, everybody was abed, the gas was turned low and there was no use dressing himself, and so grasping his bed-room tumbler, he poked his head out of the door and took a preliminary survey. The coast was clear, and lightly and cautiously as a cat, Mr. Bailey passed along the hall. At the top of each flight of stairs, he listened, and heard only the deep breathing, and rival snoring of the room occupants along the way. Down a dozen more steps, and in a corner at an angle of the corridor he saw the coveted cooler, and congratulated himself on his success.

He held the glass under the spout, gave the handle a quick jerk, and—in an instant he was on his back, the tumbler dashed out of his hand and crashed on the floor, and such a roar and steam, and stench and flood as issued forth no mortal man could endure and live, for poor brother Bailey had tapped the Babcock Fire Extinguisher.

There was a sound of hastening feet in the office below, but the great humorist was too quick for them. He hadn't the least idea what he'd done, only he knew something had busted, and whether it was the hotel water-works, or a patent gas machine, or the boiler of the warm bath department, he didn't linger to inquire. The skirt of his night shirt streamed out in the rear like a flag of distress as he sped along and up stairs at three steps at a jump, accelerated by the possibility that the flames, or the floods he had set free, were following him. "Now I lay me down to sleep," ran through his head as he flew along to his room, and, "What the d——l is it?" was the emphatic first thought on arriving safely.

How he sat all the rest of the night, with a satchel in his hand, expecting something would happen, and he edged off from the fatal corner when he left the hotel as soon as day-light came, needn't be told, for they will be imagined. But we wonder why Bailey, who can tell it so much better than we can, has never told of his escape from a water cooler.

Real Hair Switches.

FOR $1.50, at M. E. JOHNSON'S HAIR MANUFACTORY, 56 Congress Street.

Portsmouth Chronicle.

—In a certain town in Vermont several instances have occurred where husbands who have lost their wives have married again within six to twelve weeks; hence a good deal of neighborhood gossip, particularly among some of those women who "still live." One of these, Mrs. B—, at a quilting, the other day, said, "I do hope I may be spared till summer, for then I may have tombstones over my grave before my man gets tied up again."

—Mr. Smith is bound to have his joke. His wife walked nearly in front of a railroad train, and he said that if she had gone a step farther his children would have had a step-mother.

THE NEW DOMESTIC

SEWING MACHINE.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

28 Market Street, Portsmouth, N. H.

224 Congress Street, Portland, Maine.

aug6-ca6f E. A. JOY, General Agent.

The Singer Still Triumphant!

At the Vienna Exhibition, the SINGER received the Medal of Merit, the Medal of Progress, and three other Medals for superiority of productions. These are the highest Sewing Machine Awards at Vienna. The SINGER received all the medals awarded to either of the competing machines, and two medals more than any other obtained. Then, in the name of Truth, what is it that prompts people to claim recommendations for the Diploma of Honor? The fact is, no Diploma of Honor has been given to any Sewing Machine Company.

But immeasurably more valuable is The World's Award as shown by sales—proved by sworn returns to the owners of the principal Sewing Machine Patents—which last year amounted to TWO HUNDRED AND SIXTEEN THOUSAND, SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHT (219,758) machines, nine out of ten of them being for Family Use. This is over 45,000 more Sewing Machines than were sold by any other company during the same period, and over One Quarter of all the machines sold in 1872. These enormous sales are owing to the long-tested merits of the Singer Machines, which meet the wants of the public in superiority and simplicity of construction, and durability for great variety and excellence of work. That the users of Sewing Machines find these desirable qualities in the Singer beyond all others, is shown by the sales above given, aside from the awards of International Juries, either at home or abroad.

HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN

HAIR RENEWER!

This standard article is compounded with the greatest care.

Its effects are as wonderful and satisfactory as ever.

It restores gray or faded hair to its youthful color.

It removes all eruptions, itching and dandruff; and the scalp, by its use, becomes white and clean.

By its tonic properties, it restores sebaceous glands to their normal vigor, preventing baldness and making the hair grow thick and strong.

As a dressing, nothing has been found so effectual or desirable.

Dr. A. A. Hayes, State Assayer of Massachusetts, says of it: "I consider it the best preparation for its intended purposes."

BUCKINGHAM'S DYE,

FOR THE WHISKERS.

This elegant preparation may be relied on to change the color of the beard from gray or any other undesirable shade to brown or black, at discretion. It is easily applied, being in one preparation, and quickly and effectually produces a permanent color, which will neither rub nor wash off.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, DROPSY AND HUMORS.

PERUVIAN SYRUP

Makes The Weak Strong.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building upon an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

TESTIMONIALS.

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse. CHARLES MASON, Commissioner of Patents."

"I have no hesitation in assuring inventors that they cannot employ a man more competent and trustworthy and more capable of putting their application in a form to secure for them as early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office. EDMUND BURKE, Late Commissioner of Patents."

"MR. R. H. EDDY has made for me over THIRTY applications for Patents, having been successful in almost every case. Such unmistakable proof of great talent and ability on his part leads me to recommend all inventors to apply to him to procure their Patents, as they may be sure of having the most faithful attention bestowed on their cases and at very reasonable charges. JOHN'S PROMISE.

Sumner was a mushroom city which had sprung up on the banks of a ravine that cut through the western bluffs of the Missouri. In a thicket of oak saplings, high up on the side of one of those bluffs, stood a hastily built house, sided with rough, upright, cottonwood boards. One pleasant May evening, just as the shrill whistle of a steamboat echoed among the hills, this door was opened by a pleasant young woman, who was followed by a crying child.

"Oh, Sammy, quit your noise; that's pappy's little man; see the great big boat 'way yonder;" and tying on a pink sunbonnet, she took him in her arms and started down the steep, crooked path.

She reached the river just as the steamer was leaving the wharf. The tide waves of the receding boat sank lower and lower on the sand; the gay crowd that leaned over the guards grew indistinct, and she peered more and more eagerly in among the tall cottonwood trees on the opposite shore. At length four men came out of the woods, and entering a skiff, started across the river. She watched the skiff anxiously, for it frequently disappeared between the waves which were raised by the strong south wind.

Four rough looking men, in red woolen shirts—for lumbermen did not pretend to wear coats except in the coldest weather—jumped out of the skiff; one of them spied her and came toward her, saying boisterously, "Hoorah for you, Nancy! Whatever brought you'uns down 'ere this time of evenin'? Mighty fine doin's, when you oughter be to home gettin' your old man a bite o' supper! Packed that young'un down, too, I'll bet! Reckon you'd as well get back, right quick, now!" He snatched the baby from her and tossed him on his shoulder, shouldering, "Hoorah for pappy's man! Peertest boy in this 'ere town! Mighty proud to see his pap!"

She hurried up the street, pinning her deep sunbonnet more closely about her face, that the passers might not see the tears that would come. He had kept sober so long that she had hoped he would come home sober again. She had anticipated so much pleasure on meeting him, after his week's absence.

It took but a few minutes to put supper on the table. Then she sat down on the door step to watch for her husband, worrying all the time lest he let something happen to Sammy. When at last he came, the effects of the liquor was wearing off, and he ate his supper and smoked his pipe in sullen silence. She could not eat a mouthful, but she dared not let the tears come, for she knew that it would make him angry. So she fed Sammy, laying her face on his little head once in a while, to force back the choking lump that kept rising in her throat. Then she hastened to rock him asleep.

The first peep of dawn found her busily preparing breakfast, for she knew that John wanted an early start. The sound of the coffee mill woke him from his heavy sleep, and he lay quietly watching her by the dim light of the grease lamp, as she moved quietly back and forth from the stove to table; thence to the little row of shelves, in lieu of a cupboard, setting on the dishes, watching the bacon, and taking the crisp corn-dodger from the oven. "She is a dear good wife," thought he; "what a scoundrel I was to make her feel so bad."

His breakfast was just to his liking, and his wife as cheerful as if he was the best man in the world. He wanted to say something pleasant to break the awkward silence, but he did not know how to begin. He had an uncomfortable feeling that he ought to beg her pardon, but, being a man, of course he did not condescend to that. At length he began by saying: "You was right peert about your breakfast this morning, Nancy."

"Oh, I allowed most likely you'd want to get off soon," she answered.

"Yes, Jones wants us there ag'in sun-up. It's only a fifty-log raft; recon we can get it down to Leavenworth ag'in' the night train starts, and I'll get right on, and be back to Atchison afore day. Don't catch me foolin' away another day 'round that old fort."

"Oh, John! I'm so proud"—she paused abruptly, for his eyes dropped with a look of conscious shame. What mood was he in? Would it do to speak then? He had shoved back from the table, and there was a serious, far-away look in his eyes, but nothing sullen or forbidden. She went around, and dropping on her knees beside him, slipped her arms around his neck, saying: "Oh John, I wish you'd promise me you'd never drink no more whisky."

"That's most too hard on a fellow; but I'll promise not to—not to drink too much ag'in," he answered.

"But I'm afeared that wouldn't do no good."

"You talk like you though I hadn't sense enough to stop when I've gotenough, if I try," he exclaimed.

"Oh, John, don't talk so; you know you promised me that nigh onto a year ago; but you think you'll just take one dram, and then just one more, and afory you know it, it's too much. If you'd only promise me that you'd never taste nary drop ag'in."

Still he kept his eyes turned away.

"Don't you mind now," she went on "how your mother said one time, 'I recon, Nancy, you count John a mighty rough chap, but he's all right at the core;' and don't you mind how she used to pray for you in them old times? Don't you mind 'the evenin' we heard her praying down by the old spring? If she's watching you among the stars, how proud she'd be to hear your promise. And John," she continued, dropping her voice to a whisper, "I pray too, sometimes. I haven't never told you, but I've been feeling right serious here of late. I've taken to readin' my bible, and I've just made up my mind to live better'n I used to; and pray for you too, and it seems like God hears me." And she laid her head on his shoulder to hide her tears.

His arm slipped around her, but he still kept his eyes turned stubbornly away from hers. At last, laying his face against hers, he spoke earnestly, "Yes, Nancy, I promise.

Presently starting up, he exclaimed, "If I hav'n't stayed till plum daylight!"

"Oh, John! come and kiss baby afore you go, he looks so sweet. Sammy! Sammy! Sammy! wake up, honey, and kiss pappy."

"Bless his sleepy eyes! Pappy's little man! I'll bring him some candy when I come home ag'in."

All day Nancy went about with such a light, cheery heart as she had not carried in her bosom for many a day; singing snatches of old hymns, and thinking happy, hopeful thoughts of him who, all those long hours, was working his rudder against the strong current of the Missouri. That evening the stars shone brightly down upon her, when she knelt by the little window, and asked God's blessing on her husband.

But she was awakened, a few hours afterward, by a rush and confusion, a shower of glass and hail across her bed; and catching her baby in her arms, she 'sprang up, frightened and bewildered. It was a terrible storm; one long to be remembered by all who felt its terrors. The deafening roar of the wind and hail almost drowned the loud thunder-claps. A blinding flash of lightning showed the trees almost bent to the ground, and the house rocked to and fro like a cradle. She suddenly felt a new, strange feeling, as if she was flying, floating, through the air. She thought that she was dizzy, and caught hold of the bed. A terrible crash—she never knew how it all happened! Her baby's cries aroused her. The wind and rain chilled her through. She started to spring up, but something held her down. A shock of pain darted over her, and putting out her hand, she felt a great beam lying heavily across her limbs. It seemed as though it was crushing her. Something struck her, then another, and another. How they stung! Oh! was her child unsheltered from that pitiless storm? His screams grew louder. Oh! she must reach him! She could see nothing through the thick darkness, but she knew that he was not far off. What if he, too, was fastened, crippled? She stretched her arms; every movement made her pain more excruciating. She strained every nerve; she could almost reach him. What if he was free and could come to her? "Oh! Sammy! Sammy!" she called, "come to mammy." The child ceased crying. She heard him move. His warm body touched her hands that were groping in the darkness. She caught him in her arms and hugged him to her breast. She felt of his head, his arms, his feet; sound and whole. How thankful she was for that. But how those cruel hail-stones must have bruised him. She rested him on the ground and crouched over him; she could move just enough for that. The frightened child ceased crying, and put his arms about her neck. If she could only find something to cover them from the storm. She reached around, but could touch only cold mud.

Oh! that terrible pain! She had almost forgotten it in her anxiety for her child. It grew more and more intolerable. It seemed as though the hail-stones struck through into her brain. What if they killed her! Was she afraid to die? Visions of eternity, of the heaven of her faith, rose before her. Should she dwell with God and the angels forever? Was it possible that there would never be an end? No, she was not afraid of death. But her child, her husband—how could she leave them? Not yet! No, no, when life opened before her! She must live to help John keep his promise. How long it would be until morning. How could she bear the pain so long? Oh! it would be terrible if John should come and find her lying there, cold and stiff. John did love her, oh! so well. He had loved her so long. It seemed so many years since he first told her that he loved her; it was on the mountain-side, in dear old Tennessee. How far away it seemed. How the sun shone and the birds sang. How dreamy and bewildered her thoughts were. How still the baby was. Yes, she could feel his heart beat. She no longer felt the pelting of the storm; had it ceased? Her thought was answered by a rush of wind from a new direction. She felt the great weight lifting off from her. She was free! Then—something struck her.

The train went snorting into Winthrop just at daylight. John jumped off, and was the first to reach the ferry. He had never seen Atchison so quiet. With the exception of those who had crossed on the ferry and a few early risers who were hurrying up the street, the town seemed asleep; but as he passed Commercial street, he saw a man who was riding a mule, coming down in great haste, who cried out, "How d'ye, John?"

"Why, Jake!" he replied, "Is that you? I allowed you was half way to Denver before now."

"We started yesterday, but we had a powerful storm on the prairie out here, last night. We chanced to be right near to a house and they let us in; but it sent our old wagons rolling over and over across the prairie, like a patch of tumble-weeds, and our oxen all stampeded; I'm on the hunt of 'em."

"It don't look like it had reached Atchison."

"No; I reckon it just took a streak."

John hurried on down the river. The road ran so near the bank that the steady swash of the water seemed under his feet. The birds were singing in the trees, and the sunshine came creeping down the bluffs overhead. How eager he was to get home that morning. His heart was full of new plans and new purposes. He could keep his promise, and he would; he would never make Nancy's heart ache again by breaking that promise. He stopped suddenly—had the storm reached Sumner? The tall buildings along the wharf were leaning roofless, one this way, another that; as if the wind, coming over the bluffs, had reached just low enough to unroof them. He hastened around the foot of the hill; there lay the brick hotel, the boast of the town, in scattered fragments on the ground, like a wasp's nest scattered by the housekeeper's broom. He looked around; three-fourths of the town lay in ruins. How was it with his home? He ran up the street until he could see where it stood. Gone! Not a vestige of it left. And his family? Perhaps they had escaped before the storm; perhaps. Scarce knowing what he did, he hurried to the nearest house that was yet standing, and without ceremony opened the door. There was no one in the room, but on a couch in one corner, a white sheet "sunk to the still proportions" of two silent forms. Moved by some strange impulse, he turned back the covering that shrouded the faces—Nancy and the baby! Shocked, stunned, he sank on his knees and laid his face on that dear form. Who can describe, who can comprehend the utter desolation of that hour? None but those who have felt it. Oh, the thoughts and memories that crowd upon him—many of them regretful thoughts. But there was one memory for which he was thankful; that he had not listened to the tempter which whispered to him yester-morn, that it would be weak and unmanly to yield to her request.

They found him there an hour afterward, but he asked no questions, made no reply to their attempts at consolation, and they left him alone with his dead. There was "hurrying to and fro" in Sumner that day, for many were left homeless; many bruised and crippled by the storm. And the mourners who wended their way up the long hill to the burying-ground, were as sad as though the silence had been broken by the tolling of solemn bells.

Readables.

Senator Conkling is reported as saying that he will not accept the chief-justiceship if it is offered to him.

The third trial of Stokes was begun in New York, Wednesday. Council for defence opened with two dilatory motions—one for an adjournment to obtain the testimony of absent witnesses, and one against the jury panel. The first was defeated at once, and on the latter a decision will be given.

A miners' riot occurred at Camborne, Cornwall, England, Tuesday, during which the police were roughly handled, several persons injured and buildings sacked.

The New York Committee of Seventy disbanded, Tuesday. Nearly one quarter of the original committee now hold office.

From Plague-Smitten Shreveport.

[Rochester Chronicle.]

The affliction visited upon Shreveport is more dreadful than that which visited Chicago a couple of years ago, though its results are not by any means as wide-spread; and there ought to be no hesitation in responding to the very touching appeal for help which appeared in our telegraph columns yesterday. If any further proof is needed of the fearful desolation of Shreveport, read the following letter, written by a noble husband, now at that place, to his wife in Philadelphia, which the Press is permitted to publish. Not intended to be seen by strangers, it will thrill every heart by its earnest and self-sacrificing devotion:

"SHREVEPORT, Sept. 18, 1873.

My Own Dear Little Wife:—Your loving and comforting letter of the 10th inst. I received this forenoon, and attempt a short reply, to ease your anxious mind. In the first place, let me say, I am as yet in good health, but suffering somewhat from fatigue, having been constantly 'on the go' since the epidemic. I am nursing, watching, laying out the dead, and doing all I can to alleviate suffering among our afflicted people. Verily we are a scourged community, and God only knows, if the pest does not abate, whether there will be any left to nurse the living or bury the dead. It is horrible! — taking them off in two or three days. On my way to breakfast this morning, I dropped in to see a poor family. I found that the father had been buried the day before, and the mother and children were down with it. I pulled off my coat, got some hot water, and gave the woman a mustard bath, which got her into a perspiration. I then went to the Howard Association (of which I am a member) and got them some nice things. I am going to nurse them this evening. Men, in many instances, are nursing women—women nurses being scarce—and have to perform offices which, in ordinary circumstances, would be out of place. I mention this to give you some idea of the suffering here. I brought Ned through all right, and now I am in demand. Tell John that many of his old friends have gone to 'the spirit land'—Wm. Smith, H. H. Lee, Leon Frankel, and others whom I cannot recall. Should the death-rate per day continue, Shreveport will be a charnel-house. It is the genuine Mexican vomito—a pernicious type of yellow fever. Many of my acquaintances are gone. I keep up my spirits and have no fear. If it is God's will that I shall die, I will die doing my duty. What little I have, my wife, is all yours; it is not much, but it is yours. I see the Northern cities are responding nobly to our cry of distress. I have often shed tears when I see the distress. It seems as if a black pall hung over our ill-fated city. I am heart-sick and broke for want of rest, but don't worry for your 'old boy.' My little wife, all will be well. As you truly say, I am in God's hands. Human help and experience amount to but little in checking the scourge."

The Presidential Election System.

Senator Morton, chairman of the committee on privileges and elections, furnishes the following:—

O. P. Morton, Matthew H. Carpenter, H. B. Anthony, Thomas F. Bayard, members of the standing committee on privileges and elections of the Senate of the United States have closed their conferences in reference to the mode of electing the President. The Senate just before adjourning last spring, instructed the committee to examine the whole subject during vacation, and report their conclusions at the next session of Congress. The substance of their deliberations thus far may be briefly stated as involving the following propositions, which were considered:

1st. To abolish electoral colleges.

2d. That the President and Vice-President shall be elected by the people voting directly for candidates.

3d. That each State shall be divided into as many districts as the State is entitled to representation in Congress, to be composed of contiguous territory compact in the former, and as nearly equal in population as may be, and the person having the highest number of votes for President in each district shall receive the vote of that district for President, which shall count one Presidential vote; that each State shall be entitled to two Presidential votes at large, which shall be counted for the person having the highest number of votes in the whole State.

4th. The person having the highest number of such Presidential votes in the United States shall be President.

5th. These provisions to be applicable to the election of Vice-President.

6th. Congress shall have power to provide for holding and conducting the election for President and Vice-President and to establish tribunals for the decision of contests as to a vote in any distric or State and make regulations governing the proceedings of these tribunals.

By the adoption of the district system of voting by the people directly for candidates with two presidential votes in the State at Large, and the plurality vote for determining the result, the election is brought as nearly home to the people as can be, not to make it an election by the nation as one community, and it still recognizes the State as such, while it enables the people of each district in the State to express their will, so that hereafter a State need not cast a solid vote, as, under this system, it tends to dispense with the convention which is now necessary in order to form an electoral ticket for each State, and it enlarges the liberty of the individual voter, who can vote for any citizen he may select for President or Vice-President. By the plurality system the election will always be final, and there can be no necessity for an election by the House of Representatives which is so much objected to. The plurality rule has been adopted successfully in all States in the Union except four in the election of State officers, and it generally prevails in the election of members of Congress. In none of the States where it has been tried is there any thought of abandoning it. Other questions are considered in connection with the votes in States and districts and providing for exigency of death or resignation of the President after election and before inauguration. These are suggestions which have been considered, but of course no conclusions could be arrived at.

The Origin of Two Stories.

According to the Danbury News, Mrs. Lunt, the author, dined one day with Thomas Bailey Aldrich, and "during the meal the party fell to conversing on that remarkable incident where a young man became infatuated with the author of certain popular articles signed 'Zoe,' and at last tendered the supposed lady a magnificent bracelet. It then transpired that the beautiful woman of his imagination was a beardless boy. Mrs. Lunt suggested that a very pretty story could be made of the incident, and Mr. Aldrich said he would write it. Mr. Aldrich admitted that the suggestion was hers, but claimed the story himself, and much good-natured banter followed. Some time after, Mr. Lunt wrote to Mr. Aldrich that his wife had completed her story, Mr. Aldrich wrote back that he had written his. 'But my wife's story is in type,' telegraphed Mr. Lunt. 'So is mine,' answered Mr. Aldrich. And that was the end of the discussion. In the coming month 'Madam Zabriskie' appeared in the Atlantic from the pen of Mr. Aldrich, and 'An Apple of the Dead Sea' appeared in the Galaxy from the pen of Mrs. Lunt."

—A young man advertises in a country paper for a place as salesman and says he has had a great deal of experience having been discharged from seven different situations within the year.

—At the Floyd county, Iowa, convention, a man was beaten by a woman for the nomination as school superintendent. He was so overcome by the event that he offered her his best hat.

The "Polaris" Expedition.

There are still strong suspicions that Capt. Hall did not come to death by fair means. The steamship "City of Antwerp" arrived at New York the other day with the rescued crew, and they were immediately taken in charge by the U. S. authorities, and conveyed to Washington, where they will be examined separately and carefully, and until they are examined, they will be kept ignorant of the statements of the portion of the "Polaris" crew previously rescued. A correspondent of the New York Herald, who was in the company of the crew in Dundee, and watched their movements closely, thinks that all was not right among the men of the expedition. He writes:—

"During the stay of the officers and crew in Dundee it is remarked that Dr. Bessel keeps apart from them, that there is no hearty fraternization between them although when they do meet the common courtesies of acquaintanceship are never wanting. It is not long before dark stories begin to leak that there is a deadly feud between Captain Buddington and Dr. Bessel. There has been a skeleton on board the ship—the skeleton of Captain Hall. Seamen will speak, and queer inuendoes and sinister rumors are presently flying in the air.

A couple of days are scarcely gone when one or two of those most intimate with the crew are satisfied that the public interest in the ill-fated expedition will soon centre solely on the circumstances associated with the death-bed scenes of Captain Hall. If two men in that ship's company are honest then there was a terrible tragedy on those Polar seas in the little cabin of the Polaris. The darkness of the perpetual Arctic night was outrivalled by the deeper darkness of a most dastardly deed of murder, in short, most foul and unnatural. Feeling fully the terrible importance of the accusation made, I have done my best to explicate it. I resided at the same hotel with the officers and crew and endeavored to watch their habits and ways as closely as I could. I became tolerably well acquainted with them, and engaged frequently and freely in conversation with all. The Doctor (Bessel) resided at another hotel, the Royal, but he was always ready to receive one with the utmost frankness and politeness; ready to enter upon all subjects of conversation save that of the death of Captain Hall."

A Step-Mother's Trials.

Judge Guild refused a divorce at Nashville Saturday. The Banner publishes an abstract of his opinion, from which we take the following:

The position of a step-mother was not to be envied. She went into a family to take the trying part of acting as the mother of the children of another, whose place it was impossible to supply. The children considered her an intruder, and entertained a hate for her which was not altogether unnatural. In the present case a high-minded young woman had attempted to fill that difficult position, and was tormented almost to death. The husband had grown cold to her, they had both, perhaps, been somewhat mistaken in their affections, and it was not difficult to see that when a husband and wife got as cold toward each other as two frogs, they could no longer live happily together. The husband had put out an advertisement saying to the world that she had left him without cause, and that she was not to be trusted. This was, in itself, sufficient to prevent reconciliation with a high-toned woman. The man who would advertise his own wife as he would a stray horse could neither have respect nor love for her. It was in the very nature of woman to love, and that love should always be cherished by the husband. No man has a right to treat the affection of a wife with coldness. It was to the indifference to her finer sensibilities that might be traceable numberless separations, which might have easily been avoided. In the present case the husband had sent mediators, and she had said that if he desired to bring about a reconciliation, it was his duty to see her, and not to act through other parties.

The Son of Nun.

M. Guerin, who has been engaged for the French Government in scientific researches in Palestine, has recently read a paper in a geographical congress at Lyons, describing his discovery of the tomb of Joshua, the son of Nun. The tomb, he states, is situated at Tigne, the heritage of Joshua. In the hill at this place are many tombs, and this one has a vestibule into which the light of day penetrates, supported by two columns, while the place is furnished with nearly three hundred niches for lamps, and is soiled evidently from their use. This argues that some periodical celebrations were held. This vestibule gives entrance to two chambers, one containing fifteen receptacles for coffins, and the other but one. In this latter one, M. Guerin supposes the body of Joshua to have been deposited, and he thinks he has discovered strong evidence of this in the statement that the sharp flint knives with which Joshua used to circumcise the children of Israel at Gilgal were buried in his tomb. On removing the debris which covered the floor of the tomb, a large number of flint knives were found, and on making excavations at Gilgal, the passage of the Jordan, a number of similar knives were also discovered. The pillars in the vestibule of the tomb are surrounded by a fillet in the style of Egyptian monuments, and this would argue a period of about the time of Joshua. M. Guerin also believes that he has found the tomb of the Maccabees at Medieh, which he thinks corresponds with the Modin of the Book of Maccabees.

—An Ohio woman, who believes in getting value for her money, recently travelled on one ticket with four trunks, two bandboxes, a flower pot, poodle dog, umbrella, jug of milk, lunch basket, paper sack full of peaches, and a boy of fifteen whose age she gave as nine.

Prosperity of the Northwest.

The St. Paul Press observes: The special telegrams to the Press from all the principal cities and towns in the State, in response to inquiries addressed to leading citizens, show that the banking and business interests of Minnesota remain wholly unaffected by the Wall street stock-brokers' panic, except so far as the temporary paralysis of monetary circulation has arrested the marketing of the wheat crop.

With the exception of a little flurry at Minneapolis, which did not last long or amount to much, there seems to have been nowhere in the State the slightest feeling or disquiet.

Trade bounds on among us as if nothing had happened. During the two weeks when Wall street has been convulsed with panic and distrust, St. Paul has been a scene of greater commercial activity than ever before—that is to say, its wholesale houses have sold far more goods than at any other previous period of the same length.

The feeling of St. Paul in this respect is the feeling of the State. The farmers and all industrial interests are prospering as never before, and the State is full of the products which command money, because the people can't do without them.

Test For Nurses.

A check on careless nurses has been found by the inspector of the society for the protection of infant life in Paris. It is to weigh the baby. If a child is well formed and in good health it will weigh heavy. To know what a child weighs and what it ought to weigh, is to know if it has been properly cared for or not. From seven days old until it has reached five months, the baby, says the wise inspector, ought to increase three-quarters of an ounce daily in weight; at the end of five months the child should weigh double what it did at its birth; after five months, and up to sixteen months it should increase half an ounce each day, and at the end of the sixteenth month should weigh double what it did at the fifth. The scales, therefore, will speak for the child, reveal, the negligence of the nurse, or the existence of disease. In addition to squills and night lights, therefore, no nursery should be without a pair of patent scales.

—According to a California paper, a young lady of that city, in telling a gentleman about her Yosemite trip, said the scenery was gorgeous—perfectly ravishing—but she didn't like their style of locomotion down there. "How's that?" said her friend, "how did you locomote?" "Why, don't you think," she replied, "I had to ride a la clothes-pin."

—A Canadian editor announced that "he had a keen rapier to prick all fools and knaves." His contemporary over the way said that he hoped his friends would take it away from him, for he might commit suicide.

New Life for the Languid.

Perfect health is vouchsafed to few. Probably ninety people out of every hundred who call themselves healthy have their "turns" of languor, exhaustion, depression of spirits and bodily pain. At these times a wineglassful of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is as refreshing as "the shadow of a rock in a weary land." It invigorates and rests the system and cheers the mind. The effect of the Bitters in cases of nervous debility, produced either by undue physical exertion, over-study, intense anxiety, or any other cause, is wonderfully reviving and invigorating. In fact, this healthful vegetable restorative possesses medicinal properties which entitle it to the rank of an article of prime necessity, and it should be kept on hand in every dwelling, and promptly taken as a remedy for all the minor ailments as well as for more serious complaints.

Liberality of Physicians.

It has always been said that physicians would disparage any remedy, however valuable, which they did not originate themselves. This has been disproved by their liberal course toward J. C. AYER's preparations. They have adopted them into general use in their practice, which shows a willingness to countenance articles that have intrinsic merits which deserve their attention. This does the learned profession great credit, and effectually contradicts the absurd erroneous notion that their opposition to proprietary remedies is based in their interest to discard them. We have always had confidence in the honorable motives of our medical men, and are glad to find it sustained by the liberal welcome they accord to such remedies as AYER & CO.'s inimitable preparations, even though they are not ordered in the books, but are made known to the people through the newspapers.—[New Orleans Delta.]

MR. E. Q. NORTON, late of Boston, will remain in Portsmouth for the purpose of tuning and repairing Pianos and Organs. Correspondence solicited with churches out of town, having organs needing repairs. Organs rebuilt, voiced and tuned in the most thorough manner. Estimates given on jobs; also specifications for new organs. Churches about to buy will save money by consulting me, as I am under the control of no maker and work for the interest of the party buying.

Trial of a New Car Ventilator.

A party of scientific men, railroad officials and several representatives of the press, at the invitation of the Eastern railroad managers, made an excursion from Boston to Portand on Thursday on a special train for the purpose of inspecting the workings of a car ventilator, the invention of Judge S. C. Maine of Boston. We have not time to explain it in detail, and while we reserve this for another issue, we may remark that though the tests applied were severe and thorough, the invention fully satisfied the party that it is a great improvement upon the present method of ventilating railway cars and must sooner or later be universally adopted. The train on its return from Portland made the rare time of fifty two miles in one hour and twenty eight minutes, making five stops in the meantime.

"Little Sunshine."

Wilkinson's New England company, consisting of Charlie and Lillie Wilkinson, Frank Budworth, Walter Kelly, Chas. Farwell, H. Rees Davies, Blanche Slader, Louise Abbott, Rachel Cantor, Nellie Oakley and others, will produce the new drama with the above title at the Temple, this evening. The cast is a very good one and the names of the company should be sufficient to guarantee a faithful representation. Mr. Wilkinson has the best stock company travelling in New England. Lillie is an old favorite with Portsmouth people, and a full house should greet their return.

We hear that Rev. Carlos Martyn has received a call to go to Malden, Mass., at a alary of $4000. Portsmouth people will be sorry to spare him.

He Peppered Their Nostrils.

[Janesville (Wis.) Gazette.]

The spirit of malicious mischief which has given no respite to the tortured spirit of George Russ found an aperture for wholesale exit in the numerously attended party at the Harris works on Friday night. After long and patient watching, his expectant vision took in the grand opportunity to relieve himself at one fell swoop of the overburdened desire to inflict his mischievous ingenuity upon his fellow creatures, and achieve that sudden distinction which comes to those who enter with the true spirit of energy upon the consummation of well laid plans. On Friday afternoon George purchased a quarter of a pound of cayenne pepper and placed it safely in his outside pocket. He had no invitation, but Geo. stands not upon the conventionalities of that society which refuses him recognition. He had business there and he went. Cautiously he entered the crowded room, threading his way here and there, meandering to the right, to the left, forwards, backwards, and as he progressed in his travels the quarter of a pound of cayenne pepper which he had bought in the afternoon, spread itself in serpentine shapes upon the floor of the room. Then George withdrew to a retired corner and enjoyed the sneezing and excited remarks of his two thousand victims. He went home happy that night, and doubtless would have been so still had not Marshal Crotzenberg pulled him from under the sidewalk on North Main street last Saturday afternoon and taken him to jail. This morning he was brought into the presence of Justice Smith to answer to a criminal charge, and the upshot of the affair is that he is sentenced to forty days in jail and a fine of $14.00. This sentence is a severe one, but the offence, given perhaps more in a spirit of mischief than malice, was of an aggravated natnre, and George must furnish the example for scores of other boys who are ripe for just such fun.

Scientific Sweetness.

An invention which threatens to interfere greatly with our commerce is reported from Paris, and if it proves a success it will probably have the effect of causing an entire revolution among the Southern planters. This new discovery is a method of making sugar by uniting into a compound its constituent atoms of carbonic hydrogen and oxygen. The inventor, Mr. Jouglet, says that the cost of production will be 50f. per cwt., and he has already so far succeeded in establishing the utility of his invention that a company of manufacturers have been persuaded to purchase it from him for the comparatively moderate sum of $240,000. What the sugar planters and refiners will do if this discovery turns out to be as important as it promises remains to be seen; but there is no doubt that if it is only partially successful strange developments may be expected. The invention is said to be very simple and one easily explained, and endless quantities of saccharine substance can, it is claimed, be manufactured by this new process in so short a time and at so small a cost as to preclude the possibility of competition.

Chopping Small Wood.

If the census reporters had made enquiry it would undoubtedly have appeared that millions of persons are ignorant of the risk of a black eye in striking brittle kindling wood with a hatchet upon the concave surface of a chopping block. Some who have swung an axe more or less every morning of their lives, for years, are unaware of the true principle for cutting a thick stick of dry wood in two. Suppose your chopping block is a two foot chunk of hardwood set on end with three stiff pegs of hard wood radiating from near the bottom to make it stand steady, and another peg near the top for a handle, if you please. Then with the smallest end of the stick in hand, with a moderate clip, you fasten the edge of the axe or hatchet diagonally in the middle, or at the proper distance from the end of the stick to suit your stove. Then raising stick, axe, and all together, you bring the wood at the junction with the edge of the hatchet down upon the convex verge or, the chopping block furthest from you, with a mighty thwack. Saying "ach!" probably and dividing the wood at one blow. You'll see, if you reflect a moment, that the momentum of that end of the stick, projecting beyond the chopping block, so opens the cleft at the exact time of need as to allow the metal to penetrate and sever the wood with the least possible friction.

—A lace kerchief, folded Quaker fashion over the shoulders, and passing under the waist of low dresses, is among the favorite novelties. The prettiest neck looks prettier under a film of lace, and its beneficent effect on one not pretty is past computing. There is a dash of coquetry in these delicate kerchiefs, that is in no wise displeasing to the average feminine mind, and they are destined to a very active existence.

—Vermont girls have got the hang of postal cards. Last week, a nice young man in Greenboro' had his wounded heart lacerated still more by a postal card from his Ann Eliza which said, "You needn't come Saturday night, nor any other night; I don't want to see you."

—"Rhode Island is said to be overrun with mice." A mouse, perhaps, not mice.

HARD WHITE ASH COAL,
FREE BURNING WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN WHITE ASH COAL,

NORTH FRANKLIN COAL,
LYKENS VALLEY COAL.

In order that all coal shall be shipped in good order, a most rigid system of inspection, both at the mines and at the shipping ports, will at all times be enforced. In every district of the coal region there will be appointed a number of competent persons skilled in the preparation of coal, as local inspectors, whose duty it will be to visit the several collieries daily to see that a proper force is at all times employed in removing slate, and to prevent, if possible, any coal being sent from the mines in bad order. In addition to these efforts at prevention, no means will be left untried at the shipping ports to cure the evils of careless preparation. At Schuylkill Haven, Port Clinton and Port Richmond, ALL COAL WILL BE SUBJECTED TO THE PERSONAL EXAMINATION OF A SKILLED INSPECTOR BEFORE IT IS SHIPPED, and if condemned by him, will be dumped in places provided for the purpose, and before being loaded into vessels WILL BE THOROUGHLY REPICKED AND CLEANED BY HAND.

The Singer Still Triumphant!

At the Vienna Exhibition, the SINGER received the Medal of Merit, the Medal of Progress, and three other Medals for superiority of productions. These are the highest Sewing Machine Awards at Vienna. The SINGER received all the medals awarded to either of the competing machines, and two medals more than any other obtained. Then, in the name of Truth, what is it that prompts people to claim recommendations for the Diploma of Honor? The fact is, no Diploma of Honor has been given to any Sewing Machine Company.

But immeasurably more valuable is The World's Award as shown by sales—proved by sworn returns to the owners of the principal Sewing Machine Patents—which last year amounted to TWO HUNDRED AND NINETEEN THOUSAND, SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHT (219,758) machines, nine out of ten of them being for Family Use. This is over 45,000 more Sewing Machines than were sold by any other company during the same period, and over One Quarter of all the machines sold in 1872. These enormous sales are owing to the long-tested merits of the Singer Machines, which meet the wants of the public in superiority and simplicity of construction, and capability for great variety and excellence of work. That the users of Sewing Machines find these desirable qualities in the Singer beyond all others, is shown by the sales above given, aside from the awards of International Juries, either at home or abroad.

HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN
HAIR RENEWER!

This standard article is compounded with the greatest care.

Its effects are as wonderful and satisfactory as ever. It restores gray or faded hair to its youthful color.

It removes all eruptions, itching and dandruff; and the scalp, by its use, becomes white and clean.

By its tonic properties, it restores the capillary glands to their normal vigor, preventing baldness and making the hair grow thick and strong.

As a dressing, nothing has been found so effectual or desirable.

Dr. A. A. Hayes, State Assayer of Massachusetts, says of it: "I consider it the best preparation for its intended purposes."

BUCKINGHAM'S DYE,
FOR THE WHISKERS.

This elegant preparation may be relied on to change the color of the beard from gray or any other undesirable shade to brown or black, at slight cost. It is easily applied, being in one preparation, and quickly and effectually produces a permanent color, which will neither rub nor wash off.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, DROPSY AND HUMORS.

PERUVIAN SYRUP

Makes The Weak Strong.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protectel Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures the wasting ills, simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building upon an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

AMERICAN & FOREIGN PATENTS.
R. H. EDDY,
SOLICITOR OF PATENTS,
For Inventions, Trade Marks or Designs.
No. 76 STATE ST., OPPOSITE KILBY ST., BOSTON,

After an extensive practice of upwards of thirty years, continues to secure patents in the United States; also in Great Britain, France and other foreign countries. Caveats, Specifications, Assignments, and all papers for Patents, executed on reasonable terms with dispatch. Researches made to determine the validity and utility of Patents of Inventions, and legal and other advice rendered in all matters touching the same. Copies of the claims of any patent furnished, by remitting one dollar. Assignments recorded in Washington.

No Agency in the United States possesses superior facilities for obtaining Patents or ascertaining the patentability of inventions.

All necessity for a journey to Washington to procure a Patent and the usual great delay there, are here saved inventors.

TESTIMONIALS.

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse. CHARLES MASON, Commissioner of Patents."

"I have no hesitation in assuring inventors that they cannot employ a man more competent and more trustworthy and more capable of putting their applications in a form to secure for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office.
EDMUND BURKE,
Late Commissioner of Patents."

"Mr. R. H. EDDY has made for me over THIRTY applications for Patents, having been successful in almost every case. Such unmistakable proof of great talent and ability on his part leads me to recommend ALL inventors to apply to him to procure their Patents, as they may be sure of having the most faithful attention bestowed on their cases and at very reasonable charges. JOHN TAGGART."

CONSUMPTION!
And acknowledged by many prominent physicians to be the most reliable Preparation ever introduced for the RELIEF and CURE of all
LUNG COMPLAINTS.

This well known remedy is offered to the public, sanctioned by the experience of over forty years, and when resorted to in season seldom fails to effect a speedy cure of

—AND—

CONSUMPTION
CURED

By a timely resort to this standard remedy, as is proved by hundreds of testimonials received by the proprietors.

Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry

CLERGYMEN, LAWYERS, SINGERS,

And all those whose occupation requires an unusual exercise of the vocal organs, will find this the ONLY PREPARATION which will effectually and instantaneously relieve their difficulties.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS.—Remember that the genuine Wistar's Balsam has on the outside wrapper the signature of "I. BUTTS," and the printed name of the proprietors, "SETH W. FOWLE & SONS, BOSTON." All others are base imitations. Examine the wrapper carefully before purchasing.

The Latest Munchausen.

The New York Star recently published what it claims is a letter from Wm. North, one of the Arctic explorers who accompanied Sir John Franklin on his memorable expedition from England in 1854. North is still in the Arctic regions, and, according to his statement, a great continent exists beyond the seas of ice. The Munchausen narrative "was written on the white side of pieces of skin laced together with sinews, enclosed in a morticed leg and set adrift. It was picked up in Hudson's Bay, confided to a gentleman in La Conner, Washington Territory, and by him forwarded here." The following extracts are taken from North's letter:

"In May, 1854, being desirous of leaving England I shipped before the mast on the Erebus under command of Sir John Franklin, on an Arctic voyage. Before winter we reached lat. 77 degrees north, in Wellington channel. This was the highest the ships ever got. Capt. Franklin died of brain fever in 1857. We abandoned the ships in April, 1858. Capt. Crozier decided to go to 99 degrees south, hoping to reach Hudson Bay. Our provisions becoming exhausted, all but myself perished. I lay on the snow insensible, when I was rescued by some Esquimaux and lived with them several years. From my observations I became convinced that there was a habitable land farther north. The birds and the animals often came in large numbers from that direction and then suddenly returned. The Indians all had a superstitious fear of going far in that direction, and none who did so were ever seen again. It was supposed that they perished of cold and starvation, or were killed by inhabitants beyond the mountains. I concluded to push on to the north, and reach the North Pole, or perish in the attempt. No one would go with me, so I went alone, taking two dogs and a boat that I had rigged on runners. This was on the Greenland shore, as far north as the ice mountains, known to navigators as the glaciers.

It was early spring of 1860 according to my reckoning. The season was the most favorable I had ever seen, and in two months I must have travelled fully 600 miles, living on game and seals killed on the way. I will not dwell on the perils and privations of my journey, except to say that I had killed my dogs to save me from starvation, when, on the 20th of June, 1860, according to my calendar, I passed out of a crevice or gorge between two great walls of ice, just in time to escape death by a falling mass larger than a ship, into an open space of table land, from which I could see below me, and stretching away as far as the eye could reach, a land more beautiful than England or any other country I had ever seen.

When my feelings had become calmer I descended the mountain, at the foot of which I came upon a village, in which there was a great crowd of people, who seemed to be celebrating a carnival or festival, being clad in skins. I was greatly affected by the heat and fainted, remaining insensible about two days. I was carefully attended by the priests, but closely guarded. Soon after I was taken before the chief, who is called the Jarl, and was received by him with distinction. He is nearly 7 feet high and splendidly made. He is a blonde, with long flaxen hair, and is about 40 years of age. The queen is also a pure blonde, very tall and beautiful. I am learning the language, which is very similar in sound to the Swedish. I am almost sure the ruling race here are the ancient Northmen of history. I am sacredly protected and treated with the greatest consideration, but carefully watched. The peasantry or serfs seem to be entirely another race and are swarthy. The people here worship the sun in summer and the moon in winter. Soon after I arrived, the sun commenced declining and finally disappeared on the 15th of October, appearing again above the horizon on the 1st day of March, showing that the day of summer here is seven and a half months, and night or winter four and a half months in length.

The remainder of the letter is given to description of the vegetation, animals and mineral resources of the country. The trees are very fine and include cottonwood, oak, elm, birch and pine. The vegetation grows rapidly in summer, grass growing to a height of a foot in two weeks in June. The animals are moose, reindeer, musk ox, buffalo, bears, wolves, foxes, rabbits, etc. There are also horses, very small and highly esteemed. The walrus and seal are domesticated, and are used for towing barges and canoes on the lakes and rivers. They have grain in abundance, being wheat, maize and barley; also potatoes, apples, plums, grapes and many varieties of berries. Geese, ducks and swans are numerous. Fish of many varieties abound in swarms, the salmon being favorite. Iron is plenty, mostly magnetic. Stone is also found, and there are large quantities of very fine granite. Precious stones, as also gold and silver, abound, and fine diamonds are frequently seen. Gold and silver, hammered into oval shaped pieces, are used for money. In concluding his letter, North says:

"I have now been here about eleven months; this being according to my calendar, the 22nd of May, 1861, and the heat is growing somewhat oppressive. They have not offered me any violence, and I do not think they will, as the priests are too anxious to learn from me what they are satisfied I know. I am learning their language slowly but faster than they are aware; shall put this statement, properly secured, in a seal-skin into the river, hoping, but scarcely believing, that it may pass the cataracts and be picked up by some whaling ship or other craft."

The letter is signed "William North, of H. M. S. Erebus, Sir John Franklin's expedition; inclosed May 28th."

How a Young Woman Got Her Money.
[Chicago Times.]

But one woman succeeded in fairly melting one of the directors. She was a young woman, not particularly pretty, perhaps, but interesting, and she had tears in her eyes, and $50 in the bank. She rushed frantically to one of the directors, and asked him if she could not draw her money.

"I am very sorry, madam," said he, "but I can't help you to it just now."

"But I must have it immediately," she returned passionately. "It's all I have in the world."

"Well, my dear madam, you must have patience as well as the rest."

"But mine is an urgent case, and I can't wait because——"

"Well, because what?"

"Because," said she, with a smile on her lips and a tear in her eye, "because I'm going to be married, and I've got to get some things. The man I'm going to marry has not a cent to pay the minister, and he has only one leg, and I've got to see to everything myself."

The benevolent director dove into his pocket and produced his private purse, out of which he paid her the amount, and she went on her way rejoicing.

Here's Yer Mule.

A farmer in Newbury, S. C., says the Progressive Age, has a mule so contrary that he can do nothing with it. Put him in harness, and it is hard to say which way he will travel. Put a saddle on him, and he appears to doze; but try to mount him, and he will all of a sudden kick every way, straight out, straddle-bug, with all four legs at once. As to eating, he will eat anything, from his feed-trough up to a wooden saddle. The owner took a notion to have him shod, but he kicked out the blacksmith-shop and returned home.

The owner tried to kill him, some time back, so he tied his ears with a trace-chain, and rode him for six consecutive days and nights as hard as he could under whip and spur. The fact is, he nearly killed himself in the effort, and had to be carried up-stairs to bed, and his firm belief was that the mule would die that night; but, to his astonishment, the next morning he found that the mule had kicked to death a Chester hog weighing three hundred pounds, bit a piece out of his horse's shoulder, eat up saddle, blanket, and bridle, tore down the fence, and was splurging about, more devilish than ever, to find something else meaner to do.

—A gentleman and his wife, just returned from the White Mountains, tell an amusing story in connection with the Profile House. While out driving they met a man of the New Hampshire type of the Yankee, of whom the lady asked the way to the Profile House, pronouncing it profiel according to Webster. Looking up with a shrewd expression the Yankee said: "We have wood piles up here; we don't have any wood peels!"

A balloon ascension was made by Prof. Allen of Providence, at the Knox county (Me.) Fair, Thursday. The balloon rose and sailed off south-westerly, and afterwards took a more westerly direction, and in a short time came down in the Georges River at Thomaston, some distance from the shore. The aeronaut was rescued by a boat which put off from the shore.

The ravages of the yellow fever, South, are causing the Post-Office department much embarrassment. The quarantine has practically interrupted all through southern mail routes. Southern mails have been ordered to be despatched along the western boundary of Texas.

A Roman deputation gave the Pope an album with 20,000 signatures. But you can't get anything but certified checks on 'em, however good the names are.

The editor of the Franklin Register in giving his reasons for rejecting a certain class of advertisments says:—"Years ago we were a post office detective, and in that position we learned a thousand things about swindling advertisements that the confiding public do not and cannot understand. We learned that the old "sands of life" clergyman is a burly, red-headed Englishman, who is probably good for forty years more; that all the gift schemes are the vilest swindles; that one smart rascal runs a dozen companies, and nearly all are located on Broadway, New York, etc. This knowledge we make use of for the benefit of our readers and advertisers.

It is stated that a farmer near Providence, having a cow to sell, and an applicant who was to come at a certain time to see her, arranged that his man should be milking the cows at the time. The man had three pails half-filled with water, and when the purchaser arrived he commenced milking. Of course one pail was speedily filled, and another and still a third, whereupon the buyer, astonished at the amount of milk the cow gave, closed the bargain at once, at a handsome price.

Minnesota does not care to be twitted about the Northern Pacific failure. Yet one of the Chicago papers does so, and the Minneapolis Tribune replies: This is cowardly business, and they will find Minnesota quick to resent the insult. A State growing $40,000,000 worth in a year of a single staple can afford to ignore sneers at her "hyperborean climate," and a vast and brave railroad venture like the Northern Pacific can afford to despise the words of a paper whose publisher has been thrice a bankrupt. But it will perhaps be economical to send our wheat to St. Louis instead of Chicago, and there is no reason why we should continue to feed a reptile that would bite us if it were not toothless. Suppose the Minnesota farmers should conclude to leave half the elevators of Chicago empty next year?

A passenger on the lightning train near Worcester put his arm out of the window. In a short time he had it back and was calling for a doctor, his attempt to brush a freight train off the track being a failure.

State News.

Mr. William H. Thompson, having demanded an increase of his salary as treasurer of the Manchester Print Works from $20,000 to $25,000 per annum, the management declines to do so and have secured Mr. Edmund Dwight of the Boston Manufacturing Company.

The lumber dealers of Whitefield are making preparations to log more next winter than ever before, and there are movements in favor of hard wood timber lands, looking toward the manufacture of hard wood lumber and the erection of mills for the manufacture of any article made from hard wood. New mill sites are also being planned.

Milk and Fever.

English sanitary inspectors have recently found in impure milk a fruitful cause off typhoid fever, and Dr. Benjamin Lee, of the Committee on Meteorology and Epidemics, Philadelphia County Medical Society, seems to concur with them. In a recent communication to the Board of Health of that city he says: "I desire to call the attention of the Board to a probable source of milk contamination and hence of typhoid fever and allied disease in our city. Passing a few evenings since through a milk-car on one of the main railroads, I was shocked at the noisome stench which pervaded its atmosphere. Looking for its cause, I concluded that it was due to a saturation of the floor with milk which has slopped over from the cans and become putrid. Now a space which will permit the escape of milk will undoubtedly also permit the entrance of air. Hence we have the milk during the entire time of its transfer from the farm to the city, exposed to a vitiated and poisonous atmosphere. The remedy would seem to be to insist on having the floors and sides (to a sufficient height) of milk cars lined with tin or zinc, and have them throughly cleaned after each trip."

Rockingham Christian Conference.

NEWTON, N. H., Oct. 8, 1873.

While the great Evangelical Alliance is holding its sessions with prayer and discussing, here in this little village, an alliance has just closed its forty-third annual session.

"Let party names no more
The Christian world o'erspread,"

We use the word alliance for, during the organization of this body, its aim has been the unity of Christians and the conversion of the world to the teachings of Christ.

This Conference is composed of all the Christian Churches in Rockingham County, with three in Maine and four in Massachusetts.

Tuesday morning at the opening, though a severe storm was prevailing, nearly forty members and delegates were present, among whom, from the vicinity of Portsmouth were the chairman pro tem, Rev. George Moore Payne, of Kittery, the President, Rev. J. A. Goss, Elders Wade, Newcastle, and Morrill of Rye.

The opening session was used in the usual routine of convention forms by appointing committees, etc., with an occasional good word of cheer from some of the old ministers.

The 2d session of first day was mostly devoted to ministerial and church reports. Those of the ministers were of a personal form, showing that scarcely one had been a lazy worker in the ripened field.

The roll of ministers gave fifteen ordained and not (unordained) within the limits of the Conference, beside a dozen other names belonging to the "Christians" from other conferences and States who are preaching within its bounds.

The church report was very satisfactory, giving a gain of one over last year's.

Each speech gave token of earnest labor during the past year although some of them had had severe trials, but which they hoped were only harbingers of greater prosperity. Hardly one showed a loss in numbers while most all gave increase in numerical strength as well as true spiritual evidence of a living vitality. That part of the church report pertaining to Sabbath-schools was good. We tried to secure correct statistics but could not, therefore we give estimates, gathered from best sources, at hand: Number of scholars 1200. Volumes in library, 2000; most schools take from forty to one hundred copies of childrens' papers.

Each school paid all their necessary expenses, while one school besides that, paid $100 to sustain church obligations.

A number of the churches reported that steps were taken to build new edifices, or have additions to the old ones.

The 2nd and last day, Wednesday, was given to general affairs of the church and making plans for the coming year's work. Beside the business done each day, a certain portion of the time was set apart for devotional exercises, during which many stirring experiences were related, giving to all a new desire, "not to give up the ship."

A New Dog Story.

[San Francisco Bulletin.]

A certain lawyer in San Francisco has a wife, a nurse-girl, a whole house full of small children, and a large Newfoundland dog as a playmate for the little ones. It was not known until lately that the dog had any other merits than a doggish attachment to the imily, a kind, playful disposition and a good appetite. A startling exigency-arose and he became the defender of that family. The lawyer has a near neighbor whose wife is afflicted with a mild type of insanity. The unfortunate woman was supposed to be perfectly harmless, and her husband kept her with him. She was an object of mournful interest in the neighborhood, and her vagaries sometimes amused the children. Nobody ever thought of her becoming dangerous. One day when the lawyer was at his office and his wite out shopping, and the children left in charge of the nurse-girl, were romping with the dog, there was a violent knocking at the door, which startled the whole house. The nurse-girl went to the door and the children crowded around her, and the dog was there, too, with an expression of interest on his countenance. When the door was opened the crazy woman forced her way into the hall, looking very much excited. She talked loud and looked wild, and was evidently raving mad. The dog knew her and appearing also to know that there was something wrong on foot, he crowded in between the affrighted children and the visitor and commenced barking. The nurse-girl, not being alarmed, told him to "get out." The maniac woman it seems took the remark as addressed to her, seized the girl by the hair, and dragged her down and finally clutched her throat and commenced strangling her. The girl was powerless in the hands of the maniac, and the children ran screaming. The dog not liking the course matters had taken, sprang at the mad woman with open jaws and fastened upon her. She loosened her hold of the prostrate girl, and made her way to the door in charge of the dog. The nurse-girl then bolted the door, and the now doubly-enraged woman began to throw stones and break the windows, and finally got an ax and commenced hewing down the door. The house was in the suburbs, and no policeman was near. The girl locked the terrified children in a back room and leaving the dog to guard the house, went out by a back door and hastened to the lawyer's office. The mad woman, hearing the children shrieking in the back part of the house, and the barking of the dog in the same direction, left the front door and went around to the rear of the house. She saw the children's faces huddled together in the window, and made a fresh attack. She broke the window all to pieces and tried to get in by it, but the opening was a little too high, and she had no ladder. The terror of the children during this scene can probably be imagined. They heard their friend, the dog, at the door outside, and he faithfully stayed, protesting against the riotous proceeding with his deep-toned voice. Presently the baffled maniac made her way through the back door with her ax, and stood face to face with the foe that had previously forbidden her the house. He lay crouching at the children's door, and there the lawyer found him when he came, with a sufficient force to raise the siege.

At the Bottom of a Well.

[Detroit Free Press.]

For some weeks past, up to a day or two ago, a white man named Jacob Wall, and a colored man named William Cooper, have been in the employ of a farmer about fourteen miles south of Windsor. The men did not agree very well from the start, and after a week or two had a fight, in which the colored man was badly worsted. Neither wanted to quit the farmer, and they worked on together as before the fight, though they would often go a whole day without speaking to one another. Wednesday morning they were sent to clean out and deepen an old well on the farm, about three-quarters of a mile from the house and near the log cabin in which the farmer used to live. They rigged a windlass, got a tub, and, after drawing out the water, the white man was lowered down to see how things looked for the work of deepening. As soon as he landed from the bucket the negro drew it up, and after a moment shouted down, "Strike me, will ye? I'se got you now whar ye won't come up alive!" Wall expected that a stone would come crashing down upon him, but the negro tore down the windlass and went to the house and told the farmer that Wall had left to go to Detroit and have a drink. The farmer had harnessed up to come to Windsor, and he hurried off, hoping to overtake Wall and induce him to go back. The negro got six dollars from the wife, stole his clothes out of the house, and has not been seen since. The farmer came to Windsor and Detroit, and did not reach home until Friday noon. The man down in the well had shouted and yelled himself hoarse before night of the first day, but his cries were unheard, and he made up his mind that he must wait until the farmer came to the well. When the latter got home and found both men gone, he went over to the well and discovered Wall, who was pretty well exhausted, being in water up to his waist, and having badly bruised himself in his efforts to get out. The man had a watch with him, and he thinks the hours were the longest he ever experienced, and that he had imbibed enough cold water to keep the Wall family sober to the end of their days.

Education of American Women.

There is a loud cry in Chicago for cheap homes for women; one of the sufferers cries out:

What we most need is work. Give us work at one $1 per day, and we can provide ourselves with pleasant homes.

Another writer says:

The education and training of American women is altogether defective in its way. Instead of being taught housework, and thereby becoming conversant with the routine of domestic occupations, they devote their leisure hours to reading of novels. Instead of learning to fit and make their own dresses and their fathers' and brothers' shirts, they are allowed to go gadding about the streets, and that, too, at hours that they ought to be at home under their mothers' eyes, darning stockings, or preparing the next morning's meal. I say that young girls, from eight years and upwards, ought to be made to walk at least five miles a day, in sunshine or rain, even if they could ride that distance for five cents. This is the way that I propose to apply the remedy: In no civilized country in the world is the domestic education and training of woman considered disgraceful or undignified, excepting the United States of America. Here let me state the custom in that respect in Germany, and that, too, among the most noble families. As soon as the daughter finishes her schooling she leaves her maternal home, and is taken into the family of some lady of equal rank and standing with her mother, and then assumes charge and control of the palace or mansion, as the case may be. She takes the keys of the whole establishment, and superintends the servants and kitchen. Yet she does not lose caste by so doing; even if the King or Emperor should come to dine, she sits down with the lady at the table along with him. And she remains in that capacity till she is considered capable of managing her own household. In that country the occupation is not considered drudgery or menial, by any means. Even in Britain, the daughters of Dukes and Lords go to market to select the meats, and superintend the cooking and preparation of them till they are brought to the table.

—Smith went to see Frikell, the conjuror at Boston, and came home in raptures over the hat trick. In the evening he volunteered to show how it was done. So he took his beaver, put in some ten packs of playing cards and while he was at the front door explaining that he did not know where Mr. Thompson lived, his eldest boy took out the cards and put in a dozen of eggs which the grocer had brought round. "The first thing he does," said Smith upon re-entering the parlor, "is to throw the hat down on the floor." What Frikell did next, Smith's eldest will never know, unless he goes some night; and as he is still locked up with a bottle of arnica in the back attic, his ignorance is well nigh assured.

WILKIE COLLINS' "DEAD SECRET." Wilkie Collins now stands at the head of living English novelists. His plots are intricate, his stories full of mystery, and his power as a writer are unquestionable. We have here the second volume of a new, cheap and beautiful edition of the works of this celebrated author, now in course of publication by T. B. Peterson & Brothers, Philadelphia, for which a large demand is being created by the author's public readings in this country, and in consequence, they are having a very large sale, for Wilkie Collins is now the most popular of all living novelists. "The Dead Secret," is issued in a large octavo volume, with a life-like portrait of the author on the cover, price fifty cents, and is for sale by all booksellers, or copies of it will be sent to any one, to any place, post paid, by the publishers, on receipt of price by them.

New Life for the Languid.

Perfect health is vouchsafed to few. Probably ninety people out of every hundred who call themselves healthy have their "turns" of languor, exhaustion, depression of spirits and bodily pain. At these times a wineglassful of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is as refreshing as "the shadow of a rock in a weary land." It invigorates and rests the system and cheers the mind. The effect of the Bitters in cases of nervous debility, produced either by undue physical exertion, over-study, intense anxiety, or any other cause, is wonderfully reviving and invigorating. In fact, this healthful vegetable restorative possesses medicinal properties which entitle it to the rank of an article of prime necessity, and it should be kept on hand in every dwelling, and promptly taken as a remedy for all the minor ailments as well as for more serious complaints.

Liberality of Physicians.

It has always been said that physicians would disparage any remedy, however valuable, which they did not originate themselves. This has been disproved by their liberal course toward J. C. AYER's preparations. They have adopted them into general use in their practice, which shows a willingness to countenance articles that have intrinsic merits which deserve their attention. This does the learned profession great credit, and effectually contradicts the prevalent erroneous notion that their opposition to proprietary remedies is based in their interest to discard them. We have always had confidence in the honorable motives of our medical men, and are glad to find it sustained by the liberal welcome they accord to such remedies as AYER & Co.'s inimitable remedies, even though they are not ordered in the books, but are made known to the people through the newspapers.—[New Orleans Delta.]

The Deflecting Ventilator.

The subject of ventilation is getting more attention in these days than formerly, although by no means so much as it should receive at the hands of the public, when it is considered how many of the lives and how much of the health of a people are contingent upon it. It is no doubt true that more bad than good air is breathed. And when we reflect that air is only fit to be breathed once, and that by bad air is meant that which has once entered our lungs and been expelled, it is somewhat startling to be told that we inhale more poisoned air than pure; so that it will readily be seen that too much attention cannot be given to so important a subject, transcending in moment even the great question of ballooning!

The theory of ventilation is by no means settled. Opinions differ among scientists and with those who have made the matter a study. The object to be attained is that of keeping up in an apartment a thorough change of air all the while, without the risk of health or comfort by exposure to sudden drafts. To this end many private individuals have expended large sums of money. Dwelling houses, however, are generally better ventilated than public buildings or public conveyances; the latter especially, being sadly neglected. "Corporations have no souls," is a trite saying, but they generally have that which serves a better purpose, viz., shrewd perceptiveness, which enables them to discern (some more dimly than others, to be sure) the needs of the public, and to cater to its desires.

Foremost among those caterers is the Eastern Railroad, which is becoming noted for its adoption of all the modern conveniences for travel, thus constituting it a first class road. On Thursday as, mentioned in the CHRONICLE of Friday, a large party of railroad superintendents and officials, together with a few scientific men, took passage from Boston to Portland and back in a car having Judge Maine's deflecting ventilator attached. This method of purifying and keeping purified the air of a railway car is new and somewhat novel. It consists of a tin box in the side of the car upon the window sill, extending about three inches into, and an equal distance outside the car. The air is received into the ends of the outside box, from whence it is communicated to the inner box and through a wire netting of infinitesimal fineness into the car in a direct perpendicular line to the top, creating a current or draft and disturbing the air to such a degree as to set it in motion throughout the car.

The result is that acting in conjunction with the present roof ventilators, a perpetual, yet imperceptible change of air is going on and the health of no one endangered. At the same time, also, all cinders are effectually excluded. The appliance was subjected to a thorough test on the occasion above alluded to, and gave general satisfaction. For instance, the car was filled with smoke by means of chemicals so that breathing became unpleasant. The ventilators at the top of the car were wide open and yet the suffocating smoke obstinately refused to depart; the patent ventilating attachment was then opened, and the apartment was entirely free from smoke in just two minutes.

It is also an interesting fact that may be stated for the gratification of smokers, as well as for those who dislike the aroma of tobacco, that while nearly every member of the party alluded to were smoking during the greater portion of the trip, not even a smell of tobacco could be discerned in the car, so complete was the ventilation. The company of gentlemen who were invited upon the excursion was a genial and happy one, and the trip in every respect was of a most enjoyable character. A bounteous table was spread on the route and at Cape Elizabeth the train ran upon a side track and halted while the merits of the lunch were tested, after which the train moved on to Portland.

On the return, the company came together and discussed the advantages of the new ventilator. The following resolutions were drawn up, and unanimously adopted;

Whereas, The matter of proper ventilation of railroad cars has been the subject of considerable discussion among railroad managers and the travelling public for a long time, and through the courtesy of the Eastern Railroad we have had an opportunity of witnessing the various experiments in ventilation under the patents of Judge S. C. Maine:—

Resolved, That it is due to him that a proper recognition of the wonderful and successful experiments made by him to-day should be made known, and, so far as the results of to-day's experiments are concerned, they are entirely satisfactory.

After many expressions of thanks on the part of Judge Maine for the careful attention which his experiments had received and the favorable opinions expressed, the train rolled into the Boston station shortly before seven o'clock, barely giving time for the conclusion of a very absorbing trial, in which one of the most respected of the railroad officials of the party was found guilty by his peers of a petty crime, Judge Maine presiding over the case with his accustomed impartiality, and pronouncing dire sentence on the offender.

Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Company.

COAL.

HAVING contracted for a quantity of the above coal, we would call the attention of Manufacturers, Dealers and Consumers to the following different grades mined and controlled by the Company:

HARD WHITE ASH COAL,
FREE BURNING WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN RED ASH COAL,
NORTH FRANKLIN COAL,
LYKENS VALLEY COAL.

In order that all coal shall be shipped in good order, a most rigid system of inspection, both at the mines and at the shipping ports, will at all times be enforced. In every district of the coal region there will be appointed a number of competent persons skilled in the preparation of coal, as local inspectors, whose duty it will be to visit the several collieries daily to see that a proper force is at all times employed in removing slate, and to prevent, if possible, any coal being sent from the mines in bad order. In addition to these efforts at prevention, no mauer will be left untried at the shipping ports to cure the evils of careless preparation. At Schuylkill Haven, Port Clinton and Port Richmond, ALL COAL WILL BE SUBJECTED TO THE PERSONAL EXAMINATION OF A SKILLED INSPECTOR BEFORE IT IS SHIPPED, and if condemned by him, will be dumped in places provided for the purpose, and before being loaded into vessels WILL BE THOROUGHLY REPICKED AND CLEANED BY HAND.

We keep a fine stock of the above coal on hand, also

Portsmouth Chronicle.

—A certain old lady who had been famed for sour looks and not very sweet words, touching the various accidents of life, was observed to have suddenly become very amiable. "What happy change has come over you?" said a neighbor. "Why," said the transformed, "to tell you the truth, I have been all my life striving for a contented mind, and I have finally made up my mind to sit down contented without it."

—It was lye that laid a child low in Girardville. It drank it while the mother was out preparing the grease to make soap. The lye was concentrated, and it took the concentrated energies of the mother and two physicians to save the child.

THE NEW DOMESTIC

SEWING MACHINE,

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

25 Market Street, Portsmouth, N. H.

234 Congress Street, Portland, Maine.

aug8-cm6f E. A. JOY, General Agent.

The Singer Still Triumphant!

At the Vienna Exhibition, the SINGER received the Medal of Merit, the Medal of Progress, and three other Medals for superiority of productions. These are the highest Sewing Machine Awards at Vienna. The Singer received all the medals awarded to either of the competing machines, and two medals more than any other obtained. Then, in the name of Truth, what is it that prompts people to claim recommendations for the Diploma of Honor? The fact is, no Diploma of Honor has been given to any Sewing Machine Company.

But unmeasurably more valuable is The World's Award as shown by sales—approved by actual returns to the owners of the principal Sewing Machine Patents—which last year amounted to TWO HUNDRED AND NINETEEN THOUSAND, SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHT (219,758) machines, nine out of ten of them being for Family Use. This is over 40,000 more Sewing Machines than were sold by any other company during the same period, and over One Quarter of all the machines sold in 1872. These enormous sales are owing to the long-tested merits of the Singer Machines, which meet the wants of the public in superiority and simplicity of construction, and capability for great variety and excellence of work. That the users of Sewing Machines find these desirable qualities in the Singer beyond all others, is shown by the sales above given, aside from the awards of International Juries, either at home or abroad.

HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN

HAIR RENEWER!

This standard article is compounded with the greatest care.

Its effects are as wonderful and satisfactory as ever. It restores gray or faded hair to its youthful color. It removes all eruptions, itching and dandruff; and the scalp, by its use, becomes white and healthy.

By its tonic properties, it restores the capillary glands to their normal vigor, preventing baldness and making the hair grow thick and strong.

As a dressing, nothing has been found so effectual or desirable.

Dr. A. A. Hayes, State Assayer of Massachusetts, says of it: "I consider it the best preparation for its intended purposes."

BUCKINGHAM'S DYE,

FOR THE WHISKERS.

This elegant preparation may be relied on to change the color of the beard from gray or any other undesirable shade to brown or black, at discretion. It is easily applied, being in one preparation, and quickly and efficiently produces a permanent color, which will neither rub nor wash off.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, DROPSY AND HUMORS.

PERUVIAN SYRUP

Makes The Weak Strong.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the system, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building upon an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

Caveats, Specifications, Assignments, and all papers for Patents, executed on reasonable terms with dispatch. Researches made to determine the validity and utility of Patents of Inventions, and legal and other advice rendered in all matters touching the same. Copies of the claims of any patent furnished, by remitting one dollar. Assignments recorded in Washington.

No Agency in the United States possesses superior facilities for obtaining Patents or ascertaining the patentability of inventions.

All necessity for a journey to Washington to procure a Patent and the usual great delay there, are here saved inventors.

TESTIMONIALS.

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse. CHARLES MASON, Commissioner of Patents."

"I have no hesitation in assuring inventors that they cannot employ a man more competent and trustworthy and more capable of putting their applications in a form to secure for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office.
EDMUND BURKE,
Late Commissioner of Patents."

"MR. R. H. EDDY has made for me over THIRTY applications for Patents, having been successful in almost every case. Such unmistakable proof of great talent and ability on his part leads me to recommend ALL inventors to apply to him to procure their Patents, as they may be sure of having the most faithful attention bestowed on their cases and at very reasonable charges. JOHN TAGGART."

Bradlaugh and Arch.

[Providence Journal.]

While Bradlaugh is rehashing the history of Ireland for the last seven-hundred years, in New York, and telling Irishmen that they can do nothing to better their estate in respect to the English government without an appeal to the sword, and that they have no right, and it would be of no use to appeal to the sword—in a word, saying that nothing is to be done about it, and, therefore, it is no use talking about it, Mr. Joseph Arch is talking to the Canadians in a manly and sensible way about what has been, might and ought to be done to relieve the English agricultural laborer from his hard and not rapidly improving condition. Mr. Arch having seen what the Canadian evil is, is assured that what that country needs is the bone and sinews, too plentiful in England; and he suggests a practical method of obtaining this labor. Indeed, he had found his plan in full operation in one case, where a Scotchman, who had a large tract of land, had brought out many of his countrymen, and was settling them comfortably on a small piece of land for each, with a house, to be paid for in labor. Mr. Arch appeals in the first place to the governments of Quebec and Ontario for aid in the settlement of new lands. What his scheme may be precisely, we do not know, but if it is marked by his usual good sense, it will be strange if it is not in some way accepted.

Coming here, Mr. Arch will, of course, find that all the provision government can make, has been made. Land can be bought for a trifle. It will be for him to consider, as the representative of those in England, to whom he is to report, whether or not the natural advantages of this country and its prospective growth, and its great demand for labor, and its educational facilities, do not offer a wider and better field than Canada. Of one thing, there is little doubt. Mr. Arch will look and judge for himself, and his report will stimulate emigration from England. Whether the tide will turn mainly toward Canada or this country, even Mr. Arch is not yet ready to prophesy. At any rate he is engaged in a good work, and he is doing it in a quiet and business-like way. It will be interesting to follow him to his return, and to learn what such a man thinks of us, and what he deems to be the future of industry here, as compared with the land he is now best acquainted with.

How the German Rear-Guard Left France.

[Letter to London News.]

Presently, as the frontier is neared, the staff halt and draw to either side of the way, leaving Gen. Manteuffel standing alone. But there has been a little blunder. We are not yet standing on the boundary line. Gluemer takes from his holster the inevitable map, and lapses into a study of it which lasts till an orderly happens to note and point out the stones indicating the frontier. All move there, and Manteuffel, with his staff behind him, draws to the right side of the road, the Metz party moving to the left. No crowd has gathered to witness this fall of the drop-scene on the terrible war tragedy, an event surely all the more thrilling in that it occurs on the very spot where one of the most memorable, acts of that tragedy was played out, and within sight of another not less memorable although not so decisive. On the bank behind Gen. Manteuffel stand two Frenchmen, one in gray, the other a countryman in a blouse. These are the only outside spectators. At a signal from Von der Burg, the band bursts forth into a crash of triumphant music. At the head of the little party rides brave old Linsingen, the very picture of a cool, collected, easy-going, jovial philosopher. There follow him the band, and then the artillery column. The superb bearing of the tambour-major is a sight to see. The band wheels to one side and plays the national anthem while the last company is tramping past. Behind the company comes an ambulance with the red-cross flag of Geneva flying—no inapt emblem of a concluded war—and then a tumbril, in the rear of which marched the last German soldier to quit the soil of France, a solid, broad-faced Brandenburger, who performed a great historical act with all the nonchalance of unconsciousness, and audibly uttered exclamations against the weather, as he marched on. Nevertheless, let me do what I may to furnish the world with particulars concerning this historical character. His name is Augustus Welck, a native of Brandenburg. He is 22 years old, and belongs to the 64th regiment. Was this, then, to be all? Was France to be free, and make no sign? By no means. As Welck strode past, the French spectator in gray stopped, picked up a flagstaff, unfurled the tri-color, and with a shout of "Vive la France," joined in by the blouse, waved the banner of France aloft. Manteuffel, who was standing just outside the boundary line, then rode away. As he turned, already French soldiers stood on the frontier line. Gen. d'armes, who had been waiting in the adjacent wood, pushed on and formed in double column across the road in case the Germans should change their minds. But they did not.

—During the examination of witnesses in the recent liquor prosecutions at Montpelier before the grand jury, Colonel Boutwell, the former well-known landlord of the Pavilion Hotel, was called to the stand and interrogated as follows: "Do you know of any liquor being sold in Montpelier, of your own personal knowledge?" "Yes," blufflly responded the colonel; I have sold liquor to eight of that jury that sit before you!" The prosecution considered him a "too-willing witness," and told him he could go, although he was ready to answer further on the subject.

Treasure Hunters in Maine.

Either to the publicity given to the operations of the band of treasure seekers at Winterport or the inability of the diggers there to find the coveted gold is probably due their sudden disappearance from that place. Winterport beaches are no longer vexed by the witch-hazel divining rod nor is the wierd gleam of the dark lantern now seen on the lonely strand at the midnight hour.

The patient diggers have gone further down the river in search of that mysterious spot which the legend, coming down from the days when the bold pirate swept the Spanish Main in quest of richly freighted galleons, describes as being on the shores of Penobscot Bay, and which hiding-place of ill-gotten gold can be identified by an apple tree growing on the bank of a little creek emptying into the Bay.

The diggers, after a long and tedious exploration, found on the shore of Little River, a small stream dividing Northport from Belfast, a small and stunted apple tree which that veracious personage, the oldest inhabitant, declares have been quite as large when he was a boy and went minnow fishing in this creek. So confident are the diggers that they have found the pirate's bank of deposit that they have commenced operations in earnest. By the side of the apple tree a great hole has been dug nearly twenty feet deep, and, in the course of the digging an immense stone weighing two tons has been displaced. The treasure seekers are still hard at work and hope at no distant day to be able to return to their families with wealth, compared to which the accumulations of Boss Tweed will be as a bagatelle. One of the gold hunters is said to be a Bangorian, and he is said to direct operation and, if the treasure is found, will have the lion's share.

The business, if business it may be called, of searching for buried treasure, has, from early days, been quite extensively carried on along the New England coast, and on the discovery of the great pine-tree shilling deposit at Castine it received a fresh impulse. There are scores of fishermen living in secluded hamlets on our coast who spend a large portion of their leisure time in treasure hunting, the element of romance and adventure therein contained being, without doubt, quite as powerful an incitant to the laborious quest as the desire for wealth.

Convicted.

Adelbert Dawes, a boy 11 years of age, has just been convicted at Skowhegan, Me., of killing Alice Spear, a girl 13 years old, at Madison bridge, on the 18th of last June. He was sentenced to nine months in jail and to the Reform School for the remainder of his minority. The following are the facts in the case:—The accused, together with Freddy Metcalf, aged 7, and his sister, Lizzie Metcalf, aged 9 years, were at Mrs. Spear's visiting. The boys went out into the barn, hunting eggs, and passed from there into the stable. Here they played round a little while. Finally the Dawes boy going along to a window near the corner of the stable, over which a loaded gun—a Springfield rifle—was hanging, climbed upon a box, underneath the window, and reaching up, took it down. Then, kneeling upon one knee, he cocked the gun and ran it out of a broken pane in the upper sash of the window, just as the two girls, Alice and Lizzie, came out towards him from the porch door, which was considerable to one side and yet within view and range of the stable window. The prisoner says he saw them, that Alice was ahead, and it appears sang out to them, "Take care, girls, I'm going to fire," then pointing the gun downward and toward the porch door, at a very acute angle with the side of the stable, he discharged it, the contents striking the little Spear girl on the right side as she was running back towards the porch door, through which Lizzie had already passed.

The death of Alice was almost instantaneous. The accused said he did not know the gun was loaded, and that the girls were out of range, he thought, before he fired; but there appeared to be discrepancies between his testimony, given in the examination before the magistrate, and that now given by him, and, although he testified that he thought the gun was not loaded, yet he said he waited until the girls passed round the corner and then fired.

Pithy.

The Congregationalist tells the following good story:

"Once upon a time, when Dr. Emmons was the sage and seer of Dr. Franklin, and Rev. Edward Dorr Griffin, D. D., was officiating as the great light hung out to the world upon our Park street cornet, the rural divine incontinently published a sermon, some of whose views refused in an inconvenient and startling manner to lie in quietness and proper parallelism with certain dogmas of the faith generally delivered by the New England saints. Dr. Griffin read the sermon. It grieved him. It alarmed him. It made him piously indignant. He sat down to free his mind. He wrote a letter. This was the letter: 'Rev. N. Emmons, D. D., Dear Brother: I have read your sermon, and wept over it. Yours truly, E. D. G.' Due course of mail brought to that epistle a reply. Thus was that: 'Rev. E. D. Griffin, D. D., Dear Brother: I have read your letter and laughed at it. Yours truly, N. E.'"

An unknown schooner, bottom up, was towed into Boston harbor on Friday with the body of a woman lashed to the wreck.

A cyclone swept over the Florida reef on the 6th instant, causing serious damage.

The tide at Newburyport on Thursday was the highest ever known in that city in the day time.

The editor of the Natchez New South incontinently slid out on the approach of yellow fever, and made tracks toward the Old North.

Hayes' stables on Berkley street, Boston, were burned Saturday morning. Eighty horses perished in the flames. Loss $80,000.

It is said of a Western editor that he is a fearful penman, the style of his hand being a cross between a twisted wire clothes line and a Virginia worm-fence. One editorial does for several days, the compositor deciphering it from the head down the first day, then tail up the next, and crossways on Sundays.

The democratic party in Minnesota may be set down among the things that were but are not. If any doubt is entertained as to its disbandment, it will be dispelled by a perusal of the following resolution, which was adopted by the convention of September 24: "Resolved, That the liberal republican and democratic parties, in State convention assembled, willing to forego all party predilections for the general welfare and to join with patriotic citizens of all parties to rescue the State and nation from their great peril, deem it best, in the present emergency, to make no nominations of a strictly party character, but recommend all democrats and all liberal republicans to yield a cordial support to the nominee of the Owatonna convention."

A few days ago a mad dog passed through Phoenixville, Pa., and bit a number of curs. The people of that town have since been shooting their pet poodles, and the Phoenix states that one person was so thoughtful as to throw a number of defunct dogs into French Creek dam, which supplies the town with water.

The Italians of Philadelphia are holding a fair to raise funds for a monument to a gentleman named Christopher Columbus, deceased, who was a countryman of theirs, and a sailor, we believe.

Senator Sherman said in a recent speech: "The people of this country ought never to cease to agitate this question until their money is as good as gold, and then they are on a sure rock, an eternal foundation. In all ages and in all countries it has got to be an axiom in financial matters that gold alone is the standard of value, and the planetary laws that govern the universe are not more fixed and absolute in their sway than that law which demands that everything shall be measured by the gold standard, and the very moment you make your paper money as good as gold coin, then you have got a currency that you may live by, die by, and leave to your children and widows without fear or favor."

A new sport has been inaugurated at Ostend, which, while simple enough in itself, has the advantages common to most sports of facilitating the circulation of loose cash. It consists of crab races. Five or six large crabs are placed in a line at a distance of some thirty yards from the sea, and kept in position by a finger laid on the back. On the signal being given to let go, the crabs start in their usual ungainly fashion for their ocean home, and the first that reaches it wins the prize. A crab named Gladiator has already achieved great celebrity by his speedy method of progression in a lateral direction and has already won more than five hundred francs for his owner. One merit of this new style of racing, is that it does not lend itself to any sophistries about "improving the race."

A very mad cow repeatedly knocked down her owner, A. Jucket, at Granville, Vt., recently, and when Wm. Crouch interfered with her fun, she put a horn each side of him under the arms and lugged him off the field, finally disdainfully throwing him down and stripping his coat over his head. Then she turned upon the crowd of men and boys who had collected and fought with them desperately till fifteen bullets had been deposited in her body. She did not deign to notice one that passed entirely through her breast, and only suspended when her brain was pierced.

The New Jersey Constitutional Commission has adopted an amendment that all the members of the legislature subscribe to an oath that they will not accept any consideration for any bill or resolution while members.

Yellow Fever.

A special from Memphis says the situation there could hardly be worse. Business is almost totally suspended, thousands having fled, many shutting up business houses and abandoning dwellings. The chief ravages of the disease are confined to the portions of the city inhabited mainly by poor people. There are many cases in South Memphis. The disease has entered nearly every door in the infected district, whole families have died, and for a square on some streets there is not a house in which somebody is not sick or has fallen a victim. The money generously sent from all quarters is being judiciously used to aid the sick and destitute and bury the dead. Often it happens that parents abandon their children, and children their parents.

A Shreveport, La., dispatch says there are very few new cases of fever reported. All the cases taken down the last few days are doing well, and there are very few doubtful cases under treatment. There is a better feeling among survivors. Gloom prevails in the outskirts, but hopes are entertained that the worst has been seen.

State News.

Henry L. Fisher, Esq., a well known merchant of Nashua, was accidentally shot and instantly killed while on a pleasure trip at Leroy, near Niagara Falls, on Thursday last.

In the supreme judicial court at Concord, Thursday afternoon, the grand jury reported fifty-six indictments, thirty-nine of which were for the violation of the liquor law.

By a recent freshet at North Weare the dam at Thorndike's saw mills gave way and was carried off. This let the water down with tremendous force, carrying off two bridges near the place, one of which swept into a field and now stands there, apparently not much injured. Other damage was done to the property in the vicinity, and the entire loss is estimated at $5000.

On the Frontier.

Messrs. Editors: The most, if not all, of your readers are wont to rest in security under the protection of U. S., who gathers some of his wards to his embraces, "as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings." But this is not the good fortune of some of their fellow citizens.

The following extract from a letter signed by H. McKellar, P. M. at Mount Gaynor, Hays County, Texas, will to give an idea of transactions of very frequent occurrence on our frontier:

"Nothing of interest to communicate, corn crops not good, cotton fine, worms will do very little damage in this vicinity.

Indians still troublesome. Some of our boys lost horses last moon, while cattle hunting on Llano River. White Cotton lost one, Felix Burtcher one, L. Medlin two, Col. Roy two, Adam Bradford three. They had camped for the night. Medlin and one of the boys were guarding the cattle, and had the hobbled horses between them and the camp. About eleven o'clock, Medlin, in going to camp to call a relief, saw, as he thought, a man on horseback among the horses. Supposing one of the men from camp had come out, he went in that direction; but on approaching the spot could see no person. Immediately however, two guns were discharged at him; and not at all satisfied with his position he made double-quick time to camp, got all hands up, but could see no Indians, they having left with nine horses.

Burtcher and Roy have come down for more horses.

You have no doubt seen an account of the fight at Pack Saddle Mountain, moon before last. Eight of our men surprised 18 or 20 Indians; killing one on the spot; taking from them eighteen saddles, nineteen horses, a gun, pistol, bows and arrows, and a large quantity of lariats. Moss and one other man, were severely wounded; but are getting well." VIATOR.

Maryland.

The aspect of political affairs in Maryland is decidedly encouraging to Republicans. The State is not so hopelessly Democratic as the public has been educated to believe it to be by the succession of Republican defeats since the war. It was carried for Mr. Greeley last fall by the small majority of 927, and, notwithstanding the disgraceful and bare-faced gerrymandering under the new apportionment, two Republican members of Congress were elected. In every section of the State the Republicans are aroused to the necessity of active and harmonious work, while in many counties the Democrats are divided against each other, and bitter feuds have arisen, which will serve either to drive numbers of them into the Republican ranks, or provoke them to nominate third tickets. In view of all these facts, it is among the possibilities of the future that the State may be carried this fall by the friends of the national Administration. It is apparent from the tone of the Democratic press of the State that the opposition fears such a result. The appeals from that source for harmony, and the arguments advanced to combat the positions assumed by the bolters, are so earnest as to provoke a chuckle of gratification among Republicans. In fact, they have begun to calculate their strength in the next Legislature, by which a United States Senator is to be elected, and to arrange for a postponement of the election in the event of their failure to carry the House of Delegates. Referring to this subject the Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial says:

"The Maryland radicals are quite sanguine of success in the ensuing fall election in that State, and they count upon securing a majority in the Legislature, by which they will have the choice of a United States Senator to succeed Senator Hamilton, whose term expires in 1875. The Democrats do not seem to be very highly encouraged by their prospect in the next political contest, although they feel sure of carrying the State by a respectable majority. Some of the latter entertain the belief, however, that even if the Republicans shall carry the State this fall, the Democrats will still retain control of the State Senate, and it is hinted that if the Radicals secure the lower house the other branch of the Legislature would probably decline to vote in joint ballot, thereby producing a dead lock, preventing the election of a United States Senator, and depriving the State of one representative in Congress."

—"Thirty-two cents!" echoed a woman yesterday, when her grocer charged her that sum for a pound of butter. "Yes, 'um," he replied with a bland smile. "You see the grocer can't carry much of a reserve, and we can't turn out our collaterals at a sacrifice. If the government calls in the bonds due in 1874, and the imports of bullion tend to ease the money market a little, butter must find its level with everything else. Butter is very panicy just now, but I think the worst is over." She paid the money without further growling.

Disclosures Concerning the Nathan Murder.

John T. Irving, the selfconfessed murderer, has arrived at New York. No one is allowed to see the prisoner, who is in excellent health. It is said, however, that the police are now convinced that Irving's story is not a fabrication. Many facts which never appeared in print in relation to the Nathan case have been known by the officers working in the case for some time. They were only awaiting connecting links to make the chain of evidence complete, and it is now believed that the prisoner has the power to place them on the right track. In the first place it is believed that the following named persons were engaged in the attempt to rob Nathan's house July 29, 1870: George Ellis, Dan Kelley, who is now in Sing Sing, serving a term for burglary, Carr, who is also in Sing Sing, and Billy Forrester, now in Joliet prison. The job was put up by a German woman, whose name could not be ascertained, who was then lodging with Billy Johnson. She subsequently went to board with Irving, and while there, no doubt, the latter managed to secure papers, etc., by which he proposes to show all about the Nathan case. Dan. Kelley was heard to say that he killed Nathan, and to tell how he used the "dog" while doing so. Kelley is also known to have $10,000 worth of bonds, which were taken from Nathan's safe, in his possession, and was attempting to negotiate them. The "dog" was given to Dan. Kelley at the "Oriental Saloon," corner of Grand street and East Broadway by a caulker, who lived in Stanton street and worked in the Brooklyn navy yard. It is said that after the murder, the caulker, who furnished the "dog," moved to 76 Cannon street, where he became sick, pined away and died in January, 1872. The police authorities know that the watch stolen from Mr. Nathan was pawned at 31 Centre street on the day after the murder, and was redeemed six months after. Mr. Goodman, the pawnbroker, did not take the number of the watch, but it is believed that the police are aware of its contents. Irving's wife lives over a grocery store at the corner of Hester and Matt streets, and says her husband often told her that he had something that would get him out of any big scrape he might get into.

Balloostatical.

The New York World enters its protest against any further continuance of trans-Atlantic ballooning. It says: "The interests and the welfare of the over-taxed millions demand that this thing should be stopped and balloonacy nipped in the bud. Here are gas-bags being recklessly thrown off in every direction and balloonists flattered and feted to such a degree that finally one will accidentally find his way across the ocean and thus open the path through the air for new systems of taxation. No sooner some clever balloonist has found an aerial route to Europe than we shall have a dozen competing lines coming to this country on programmes cheapened down to a starvation point by the pauper labor of that continent."

—There is in Nashville, Tenn., what is known as the Club of Rejected Lovers, according to the Union newspaper of that place. It seems that the qualifications for membership of this Club are simply what the name of the institution purports—the fact of having been rejected or discarded by a young lady, together with a fair average social standing and personal repute. This, as will readily occur to the dullest perception, makes the entree of the Club accessible to any poor but honest young man, but seems to bar out, inexorably, the rich and the "cheeky." There is not a particle of doubt that this Club is organized upon a basis that will speedily make it the most select affair of its kind in the world, so far as sturdy manhood and bonhomie are concerned, for no man knows how good a fellow he really is, or how much real nerve and hard sense he possesses, until he has been called upon to face the dread ordeal of having his girl "go back on him." The selectness will be infinitely enhanced by another rule or by-law of the Club, which provides for the instant and ignominious expulsion of any member who betrays his weakness by going back to a young lady after she has discarded him once, whether at her instance or his own.

—While an old hen and chickens were scratching vigorously on a pier, at Richmond, Va., a rat stealthily approached from the wharf, and seizing one of the brood by the leg, attempted to drag it to his retreat. In an instant the old hen pounced upon the back of the invader, trampling him ferociously, while another hen joined her, and with two successive strokes of the beak, expeditiously plied, succeeded in cutting the rat's throat as cleanly as if it had been done with a knife. A number of persons saw the contest applauded the result.

—A bright little Pottsville ten-year-old persisted in running bare-footed, and upon being told by his sister, before going to bed, to wash his feet, he proceeded very reluctantly to obey orders, and after performing the duty to his own satisfaction (carefully washing the top and sides), his sister observed: "Why you haven't washed the bottoms of your feet!" "Well, I know it," replied the youth; "but you don't stand up in bed do you?" The sister collapsed, and gray hairs are occasionally found in her plaits now.

—Last words of the two roughs who recently killed each other at Truckee: Fugate—"Oh, God! I'm killed!". White—"Thank God, I've killed him. It's some satisfaction to know that I've outlived him; but I suppose that I must follow him in a few minutes. Pull off my boots."

—Eyes likes diamonds, hair like a vexed mass of golden feathers, a faultless form, which no man can look upon without an intense desire to kiss, are portions of the description of a young lady who is captain of a schooner that trades with Houston, Texas.

New Life for the Languid.

Perfect health is vouchsafed to few. Probably ninety people out of every hundred who call themselves healthy have their "turns" of languor, exhaustion, depression of spirits and bodily pain. At these times a wineglassful of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is as refreshing as "the shadow of a rock in a weary land." It invigorates and rests the system and cheers the mind. The effect of the Bitters in cases of nervous debility, produced either by undue physical exertion, over-study, intense anxiety, or any other cause, is wonderfully reviving and invigorating. In fact, this healthful vegetable restorative possesses medicinal properties which entitle it to the rank of an article of prime necessity, and it should be kept on hand in every dwelling, and promptly taken as a remedy for all the minor ailments as well as for more serious complaints.

'73 REUNION.

THE "HISTORY OF THE RETURN OF THE SONS & DAUGHTERS OF PORTSMOUTH, JULY, 1873," is just published. It contains 96 pages, octavo, and is a thorough detail of everything relating to the three Festal Days,

The Reunion, July 4th,

High School Reunion, 5th,

The Praise Meeting, 6th;

and containing a

Verbatim Report

of every speech that was uttered at the Tent on the 4th and 5th, besides giving a full report of all the Reunion preliminary movements in Portsmouth, Boston and New York. Much of the matter of this work has never yet appeared in any form, and we think it will prove interesting to all who participated in the Three Days' Jubilee.

The work is for sale at the Chronicle Office, J. H. Foster's Bookstore, and at Wm. H. Preston's.

Graveyard Thieving.

The contemptibly mean practice of certain extra-sneaking sneak thieves, who regularly rob the graves of the dead in the South Cemetery of the cut flowers and growing plants placed on them by surviving friends, have more than once been denounced in the strongest term, by every paper in the city; but still the abandoned wretches (no milder term will apply to anything so utterly heathen and contemptible as these grave-yard thieves) carry on their miserable pilfering, and graves are constantly being despoiled of their floral tokens of affectionate remembrance. A recent instance of this ghoul's work which has been brought to our notice, is the robbing of a large urn placed on the grave of a once prominent professional man of this city by his widow, who spares no expense to beautify the last resting place of her deceased husband. The florist who had charge of the work, on a recent visit, discovered the urn overthrown, and beneath it a fragment of a valuable shawl, evidently torn from the garment by the urn in its fall; a rare and costly plant which had been growing in the urn all summer was missing, having been transplanted roots and all, a considerable quantity of earth having been removed with the plant; and a generous supply of "slips" had been clipped from all the other plants in the urn and upon the graves in the enclosure, many of them being ruined by the severity of the thief's pruning. The bit of shawl is carefully preserved by the finder, who will gladly hand it over to any one who will prove ownership by producing the garment from which the piece was torn. The indignant discoverer of the outrage mentioned it to a man whose occupation is mainly in the cemetery, and was told: "Oh, there's lots of that work carried on here, and 'tisn't Irish women nor factory girls does it, neither,—it's ladies! Plenty of folks think 'tis the poor people, who can't afford to buy choice flowers and shrubs, that rob the graves and steal all the flowers; but I tell 'em 'No, it's well-dressed ladies that do it—those who are well able to pay for what they want, and some of 'em hold their heads mighty high, too!' I've caught plenty of 'em at it, first and last, making up nice bouquets by stealing flowers off the graves; and I've never caught one yet that wasn't well dressed. I always sing out to 'em and ask what they are doing; and it's quite surprising to find that they are always 'friends of the family, or 'very intimate with the family,' and that 'they are quite willing we should take 'em.' But I notice they never take any more after they're spoken to!" The man who made this statement bears a good reputation, and there is no reason to doubt his veracity; and if his account is true, it is a pity a few of these graveyard-robbing "ladies"—heaven save the mark!—cannot be put through a mild course of sprouts in the police court. A single case pressed to conviction, with the penalty which would undoubtedly be imposed by Judge Page, would probably break up this disgraceful practice, which has been carried on to such an extent of late years as to compel many persons to give up the custom of decorating the graves of departed friends with anything more rare and costly than grass.

Laconics.

Dr. C. A. Norton has been delivering a temperance lecture in Dover and was well received.

The secretary of the P. W. T. A. Society has 1400 names on his pledge book. Wonder how many of the signers have kept the pledge?

Officer Chas. W. Shannon recovered a team at Raymond (on Monday of last week) which had been stolen from Moses H. Morrel of Berwick, Me. Mr. Shannon is now on the track of the thief.

The lyceum course under the auspices of the local Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals opens on Tuesday evening, November 4th, instead of the 11th as previously announced, James T. Fields, Esq., presenting "Masters of the Situations."

The splendid black mare Lady Hampton, which won two races at Piscataqua Park recently, has been sold by Mr. Dumas of the Boar's Head Hotel to Mr. E. H. Winchester for a family horse. The price paid was $1200, which is very cheap considering her qualities.

Chaplain Henry Wood, U. S. N., formerly stationed at this navy yard, died at Philadelphia on the 9th at the age of seventy-eight. He was a native of New Hampshire and, having written the life of Franklin Pierce, was appointed to a chaplaincy by that gentleman in 1856.

Mr. D. H. Montgomery and wife of this city, were on board the down train from Conway on Thursday of last week, which was thrown from the track below Union, by which the engine, tender and baggage car were rolled over in the sand, the accident being caused by a misplaced switch.

Friday evening, a lady about sixty years old, while walking on Middle street near State, on her way to sit up with a sick friend, was knocked down by a double-team which was passing. Two men were in the team but did not stop to ascertain the extent of the injuries inflicted. One horse was trotting and the other running. The injured lady was obliged to return home.

Chief Engineer David B. Macomb, U. S. N., reported for duty at the navy yard on Saturday. Mr. Macomb takes charge of machinery afloat at this station and is entirely competent to take charge of machinery afloat or ashore, or anywhere else, or of its construction, being a thorough engineer as well as a true gentleman. His return to duty here will be welcomed by all who were brought in contact with him when he was formerly stationed here.

C. N. Shaw & Co. have returned from New York with a large and varied assortment of new styles of hats and bonnets for fall and winter wear. Their establishment is being put in gala array for the inspection of the ladies next Wednesday and Thursday. The reputation they hold for exquisite taste in trimming the dainty coverings which adorn the heads of ladies young and old will doubtless secure the attendance of an admiring assemblage of lovers of the beautiful, on the opening day.

The performance of "Little Sunshine," Friday evening, drew the largest audience of the season. Lillie Wilkinson shows great improvement in her profession and is especially adapted for the character assigned her. The Wilkinsons are established favorites here, and are so because they give meritorious performances and evince a desire to do their best to please. The stock company is also the most able that has graced the boards in this city for many months. Of course they will come again—for our citizens want to see more of Budworth, Davies, Farwell and the ladies.

Advices from London state that Mr. J. B. Stearns, of this city, the inventor and proprietor of the Duplex Telegraph, is meeting with great success in his mission for its introduction in foreign lands. Already the British Government have adopted his system, and are introducing the instruments as fast as possible. Arrangements have also been completed for the Duplex between London and Amsterdam, London and Brest in France, and also for a line in Belgium, while negotiations are pending for still further introductions at important points. The London Times of Sept. 13th contained a flattering notice of Mr. Stearns' invention.

A check for £3000 has been lying in the post-office for some time in a letter belonging to a well known gentleman of this city; but the letter was misdirected and letters and telegrams went to and fro in hot haste ere the precious document was identified.

COAL.

HAVING contracted for a quantity of the above coal, we would call the attention of Manufacturers, Dealers and Consumers to the following different grades mined and controlled by the Company:

HARD WHITE ASH COAL,
FREE BURNING WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN RED ASH COAL,
NORTH FRANKLIN COAL,
LYKENS VALLEY COAL.

In order that all coal shall be shipped in good order, a most rigid system of inspection, both at the mines and at the shipping ports, will at all times be enforced. In every district of the coal region there will be appointed a number of competent persons skilled in the preparation of coal, as local inspectors, whose duty it will be to visit the several collieries daily to see that a proper force is at all times employed in removing slate, and to prevent, if possible, any coal being sent from the mines in bad order. In addition to these efforts at prevention, no mean will be left untried at the shipping ports to cure the evils of careless preparation. At Schuylkill Haven, Port Clinton and Port Richmond, ALL COAL WILL BE SUBJECTED TO THE PERSONAL EXAMINATION OF A SKILLED INSPECTOR BEFORE IT IS SHIPPED, and if condemned by him, will be dumped in places provided for the purpose, and before being loaded into vessels WILL BE THOROUGHLY REPICKED AND CLEANED BY HAND.

Portsmouth Chronicle.

—A little dog belonging to a gentleman, residing near Stonybrook, Long Island, was in the habit of following his master's wood-wagon to the landing, some three miles distant. One day he was set upon and roughly handled by a large dog belonging to a resident in the next village. The next day, though lame, sore and bruised, the little dog persisted in accompanying the wood-wagon again. When the wagon started the large farm dog was also found to be moving along quietly under it. He was never known to accompany the wagon team before. The teamster attempted to drive him back, but he refused to return. The little dog led the advance limping and brooding over his wrongs. He was also contemplating the sweetness of revenge, and gloating over its near accomplishment. When he reached the place where he had received his ill treatment the day before, he limped up to where his enemy lay basking in the sun in the front yard and snapped and snarled through the pickets in the most tantilizing manner. Thinking to repeat the chastisement of the day before, the village dog leaped over the fence, but only to encounter the large farm dog, who had been watching the proceedings from under the slow moving wagon, and who now came rushing to the rescue. The village dog was nearly killed before they could be separated. The large farm dog left the party after the fight and returned home. He had come only for the purpose of aiding his little friend to obtain revenge. The little wretch was almost human in his airs of triumph, and in his expressions of gratified malice. By what process, think you, did the little dog communicate his wrongs, or plan with his big canine friend this well-concocted scheme of retaliation?

The Singer Still Triumphant!
At the Vienna Exhibition, the SINGER received the Medal of Merit, the Medal of Progress, and three other Medals for superiority of productions. These are the highest Sewing Machine Awards at Vienna. The SINGER received all the medals awarded to either of the competing machines, and two medals more than any other obtained. Then, in the name of Truth, what is it that prompts people to claim recommendations for the Diploma of Honor? The fact is, no Diploma of Honor has been given to any Sewing Machine Company.
But immeasurably more valuable is The World's Award as shown by sales—proved by sworn returns to the owners of the principal Sewing Machine Patents—which last year amounted to TWO HUNDRED AND NINETEEN THOUSAND, SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHT (219,758) machines, nine out of ten of them being for Family Use. This is over 45,000 more Sewing Machines than were sold by any other company during the same period, and over One Quarter of all the machines sold in 1872. These enormous sales are owing to the long-tested merits of the Singer Machines, which meet the wants of the public in superiority and simplicity of construction, and capability for great variety and excellence of work. Tout the users of Sewing Machines and these desirable qualities in the Singer beyond all others, is shown by the sales above given, aside from the awards of International Juries, either at home or abroad.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.
DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, DROPSY AND HUMORS.
PERUVIAN SYRUP
Makes The Weak Strong.
The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "a thousand ills" simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.
This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Carbuncles, Abscesses, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building upon an Iron Constitution.
Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.
See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

TESTIMONIALS.
"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse. CHARLES MASON, Commissioner of Patents."
"I have no hesitation in assuring inventors that they cannot employ a man more competent and trustworthy and more capable of putting their applications in a form to secure for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office.
EDMUND BURKE,
Late Commissioner of Patents."
"MR. R. H. EDDY has made for me over THIRTY applications for Patents, having been successful in almost every case. Such unmistakable proof of great talent and ability on his part leads me to recommend ALL inventors to apply to him to procure their Patents, as they may be sure of having the most faithful attention bestowed on their cases and at very reasonable charges.

John Paul Explains the Panic.

Never again will I leave New York for any period of time, however brief; something is sure to happen if I'm not there. After finishing Saratoga it was clearly my duty to return to the city, but yielding, against my better judgment, to the persuasion of friends I prolonged my absence for a visit to Williamsburg, and a terrible panic is the result.

When I say that I have seen this panic coming for three years past I simply put on the robes of prophecy which every one is reaching for now that the event has arrived. That I am not attiring myself in the popular sack-cloth as well, is simply because I have been wearing mourning for some time back. All the summer through I have not conversed with any "eminent financier"—another and longer way of spelling speculator—who did not see a panic cloud looming darkly in the distance, and did not declare an intention of not being caught in the rain. But where are the umbrellas at the present writing?

At no time, I suppose, has even the most sanguine operator for a continued rise in securities believed that the thousands who were buying bought for a permanent investment. Each knew that his neighbor as well as himself bought simply to sell to some one else at an advanced price, and each intended in his own mind to be a little smarter than the other and get out first. Not a man was there among all the busy buyers and sellers who did not fully understand that the last purchaser would come to grief, but the idea of being that unfortunate "last man," I venture to say did not occur to one individual mind.

Impressed with a vague notion that if the many arrived at the conclusion that it was best to be getting out at about the same time, there might be a rush for it, and being besides a little lame, I thought I'd start first. So here I am. How it got out that I deemed it wiser to unload at a loss I cannot imagine, but you see the result—a widespread sacrifice of securities, a disastrous panic. Sooner than have had this happen, however, I'd have consented to stay in and be ruined—for a consideration.

Looking back at it now, I don't know that I'd have got out if I hadn't had to get. Men addicted to the street are much like those who become habituated to loafing late in bar-rooms—they don't go till they are kicked out. My health failed me; the doctors prescribed quiet and rest; so I went to Saratoga.

Well, as I was saying, we all knew this storm was coming. But I have yet to see the man who thought it was coming just yet or took in his lower sails, if he did his topsails. When it came or showed itself near at hand would be time enough to be dodging, they thought. And my father once had a horse in his stable, a fine, spirited creature, which I was fond of fooling around. The old gentleman warned me that he might kick, but I didn't thank him for that: of course he might kick—any horse might, for that matter. But I hadn't been around the stables when supposed to be at school for nothing. I had noticed that when a horse kicked he laid his ears back. So I waltzed around "John the Baptist"—that was the noble animal's name, tho' why so christened, unless because of his ability to kick a path thro' a wilderness, I do not know—just as usual, and relied on a religious observation of his ears for safety. At the least dropping of that baronetcy I stood ready to jump. One day, having business about his manger—business not wholly unconnected with a hen's nest—I approached by what may be designated as a flank movement, and requested him to stand over on the other side of the stall, as I wished to come in. That there might be no mistake about my meaning, I made it clear by pricking the flank most in my way gently with a pitchfork. But I was careful to watch his ears very carefully while making the request. Now, if you'll believe me, I didn't see his ears drop, neither did I see his foot rise. But I did hear a boy about my size strike against the other side of the barn with a bang. And after an hour or two, when I had collected my scattered thoughts and picked up the jewsharps and jack knives and green apples and stolen watermelons that the industrious animal had kicked out of me, and climbed up in the hay loft for the double purpose of picking up the top of my head—which, according to all evidence of the senses, must have landed there—and getting a better view of what was going on down below, I remarked that that horse's ears were laid down on his back as flat as though a tailor's goose had lit on them. But the warning did me very little good then. And when I went into the house and the old gentleman said he told me so, and that it would only have served me right if the horse had kicked me into the middle of next week, I found no relief for my bursting bosom till I had emptied the red-pepper cruet into the manger of "John the Baptist"—turning his clover hay into the very wildest kind of honey—and set him sneezing till those confounded ears of his stood up so stiff and straight that that they raked forwad like a jack rabbit's. And I made up my mind then and there never again to let my liking for a brisk business bring me around anything the further end of which one has to watch to see what the nearer end is going to do, especially when that has a way of letting itself so free and easy.

—nearer one
Still and a nearer one
Yet than the other,

It is sound business judgment to avoid the vicinity of any animal whose skin is so short that he can't drop his ears without raising his heels, the more so if he happens to be so particularly lively that he can go through both motions at once. Further than this, I don't know that there's any special point to my story. But I was a good deal hurt at the time, and my nose ever since has borne considerable resemblance to a badly turned pancake. It has been some satisfaction to feel that I am more familiar with the habits of the horse than I was before the accident happened, and if any one fishes a deeper moral out of my story it will further gratify me to know that my nose was not flattened in vain.

For an explanation of the present trouble, I do not think that it is necessary to look very far. If you ever had hold of a young and growing dog you must have noticed that nature keeps the skin a good deal bigger than a dog; you can take up the slack of the skin in your hands, put two or three reefs in it if you like, without pinching the dog at all. The matter with us is simply that our dog has grown so fast as to become too big for his skin—after stretching day after day till he got to be as thin as tissue paper it has finally burst. For several years the dog has been hide bound. But I don't think he's dead, even now.

Our present currency was created and the amount fixed during the war, when it had only to float the North; since, it has had to swim the South as well. And while the amount in circulation has been lessened by the destruction of notes by fire, flood and other accidents—a lessening which must amount to five or six per cent. of the total, though I do not remember to have heard this alluded to even by those who complain of "contraction"—as well as by the withdrawal of the legal tender certificates, the values which this currency was meant to represent have doubled and trebled. This is precisely as if, having launched a ship—or scow, if you please—we let a certain quantity of water into the canal where she lay, sufficient to float that ship or scow, and then shut the gates against the admittance of any further floating medium, proceeding to load the vessel down till her bottom settled in the mud. Plainly, one of the two things must be done; either let more water into the canal, (that is give more currency,) or else dump the cargoand bring our ship back to drawing the same water she did in the first place. The cargo being really of value—that is to say, values having really increased, not only in this country, but the world over—more water would seem the easier way out of the dilemma. I don't assume to teach my grandmother how to suck eggs, but that is how it looks to me. Had we a gold and silver circulation, the evil would right itself; money would flow in from other nations; but this relief is denied by the existing nature of things, the currency of the rest of the world being merely merchandise to us, and, in reality, only going to load our ship down deeper. Figure it what way you please does it not amount to this in the end—less freight or more water?

Origin of "Hail Columbia."

In the recollections of Washington, just published, occurs the following anecdote:

The song of "Hail Columbia," adapted in measure to the "President's March," was written by Joseph Hopkinson, of Philadelphia, in 1789. At that time, war with France was expected, and a patriotic feeling pervaded the community. Mr. Fox, a young singer and actor, called upon Hopkinson one morning, and said: "To-morrow evening is appointed for my benefit at the theatre. Not a single box has been taken, and I fear there will be a thin house. If you will write me some patriotic verses to the tune of the "President's March," I feel sure of a full house. Several about the theatre have attempted it, but they have come to the conclusion that it cannot be done; yet I think you may succeed." Mr. Hopkinson retired to his study, wrote the first verse and chorus, and submitted them to Mr. Fox, who sang them to a harpsichord accompaniment. The tune and words harmonized. The song was soon finished, and that evening the young actor received it. The next morning the placards announced that Mr. Fox would give a new patriotic song. The house was crowded, the song was sung, the audience delighted. Eight times it was called for and repeated, and when sung the ninth time the whole audience stood up and joined in the chorus. Night after night "Hail Columbia" was applauded in the theatre, and in a few days was the universal song of the boys in the streets. Such was the origin of our national song, "Hail Columbia."

—It is well known that rubbing the body with hog's fat has the effect of reducing the temperature of the skin in scarlet fever. Incorporate one or two grammes of carbolic acid into a hundred grammes of lard, and, with this, rub the whole body, excepting the head, two or three times a day, according to the intensity of the inflammation characterizing the case in hand. The effect of this kind of treatment is to produce a pleasant feeling of coolness, to keep the skin softer, and after each application the temperature of the skin falls somewhat. The carbolic acid operates to destroy the germs and spores of the disease.

The Buffalo Courier intimates that Mr. Colfax refuses to lecture at Potsdam, N. Y., until the people change the name of their town to "Kettle"-swear!

State elections occur to-day in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Nebraska.

American fishermen have met with great success in the mackerel fisheries at Cape Breton. Fifty barrels have been taken in a day, and twenty and twenty-five barrels is a common catch.

The Mexican congress has decreed the separation of church and state, abolished the religious oath, and taken strong measures against the monastic orders. The Jesuits are ordered to leave the country.

The yellow fever prevails at Memphis with unabated virulence, and no hopes are entertained of any immediate improvement.

Ex-Senator Pomeroy was shot in Washington on Saturday by M. F. Conway of Kansas, formerly a member of Congress and afterwards consul at Marseilles. He was but slightly wounded, however, and Conway was released on $10,000 bail.

The recent gale in the West Indies caused great damage. Among the wrecks are those of a Spanish steamer, with which twenty-six lives were lost, and of the steamship Missouri, formerly the Hammonia.

The Spanish steamer Maise was lost during the late gales near the Isles of Pines. Of the crew, numbering twenty-six, only two were saved.

The Shreveport Times has stood nobly to the fight. It has continued its daily publication, though Yellow Jack was carrying off compositors and reporters as fast as they could be put on. Now it appears in deep mourning for the loss of its proprietor, Mr. Charles W. Lewis, who died manfully at his post.

The Chinese grog-shop frequented by the European and American sailor must have on tap the most fearful fluid in the world. Vice-Admiral Shadwell, of the English navy, and our own Admiral Jenkins declare the compound sold to be made of native samshu, kerosene, tobacco, bang, and sulphuric acid, and that one bottle is sufficiently strong to make a ship's company drunk. Its price is only a shilling, and it can be bought wholesale for about nine shillings a dozen, and it is said to be a cheap and effective blister for horses.

The Pekin Gazette quotes a most romantic Chinese episode. There lately lived a young lady of Anhwey, who was a model of every classical and domestic virtue from her youth upwards. She twice cut pieces of flesh from her arm when her mother fell ill, and eventually committed suicide by throwing herself from a pagoda, when her filial remedy had failed and her mother had gone to the lands of spirits. She left a letter requesting to be buried as she fell, and begging her father not to grieve, as she had vowed beforehand to accompany her mother if she died, and was only fulfilling her oath. Li Hung Chang petitions the Emperor to allow a memorial arch to be erected in her honor, and his Majesty consents.

Jute is principally manufactured at Dundee, Scotland, where there are 59 mills, ranging from four to eight stories high. The largest mill employs 5000 hands, and works up into fabrics 1,000,000 pounds of raw jute per week. The principal consumers of burlaps or jute cloth in the United States are Californians, who use them for grain bags. Ten per cent. of the value of the California wheat crop is expended in the purchase of coarse jute cotton and linen bags.

Harper's Weekly pays this tribute to Pres. Grant: "Among all American Presidents there has been none more scrupulously loyal to law than President Grant. And never was that fidelity more desirable than during a Presidency immediately following a war, which always diminishes the sanctity of civil authority. Usurpations and dispensations with the law might have been expected from a military President, and at a time when an abnormal situation would have seemed to justify them. But President Grant has shown no such disposition. He has not only not assumed extraordinary powers, but he has sought to avoid even the opportunity of exercising lawful authority, as in the case of emergencies in the Southern States. If there has been fault it is not his, but the law's. Among the great services which President Grant has rendered to the country, not the least is the tranquil and modest firmness with which he has maintained the authority of law."

The Council Bluffs Republican gives its ideas of free banking in this manner: "The present financial breakdown will almost certainly lead to the adoption of some well devised scheme for free banking. Prominent statesmen and newspapers all over the country are calling loudly for it. We can see no reason why any one should be opposed to the principel. Had it been in operation this fall no such calamity as has recently overtaken so many business men in the East could have occurred. The limits of the present law have now been reached, and there can be no further extension of the issue of bank currency until it is authorized by Congress. That body could authorize the addition of $50,000,000 or $100,000,000. But why limit it at all? Let the people have all they want, provided only it is well secured and issued on a sound basis."

—If there is any man whom, from the bottom of my heart, I pity, it is the man who believes that all mankind are cheats and swindlers, and who considers life merely a game of grasping and griping. If there is any young man for whom I feel a deep regret, as for a man sure to fail, sure to live and die wretchedly, it is the young man who goes forth into the world, believing that his only motives in this world are selfish motives. Depend upon it that selfishness is not the only motive in the world—nay, it is not even the strongest motive.

BY UNCLE JOSEPH.

The population of Portsmouth at different periods of taking the census was as follows:

The first census was taken by the selectmen and was in 1767 when the town was 144 years old. The population was found to be 4466. Of this number 187 were returned as slaves.

The next was in 1775 about the commencement of the Revolutionary war, and was taken by the order of a convention in the Province. It was then 4590. Gain in eight years, 124.

The third was after Independence was gained, and was taken in 1790 by order of Congress. It was 4720. Gain in 15 years, 130.

Census of 1800. The population was 5339. Gain in ten years, 619.

The next decade ended in 1810. Population 6934. Gain 595. Census of 1820. Population 7327. Gain, 393.

Census of 1830. Number 8032. This was the large gain of 705.

1840. Decrease now for the first time. The population was 7887. Loss 145.

1850. It had come up finely as to numbers. The population was 9739. Gain 852. Portsmouth had been up to this census the most populous town in the State, but now Manchester was ahead, having a population of 13,973. It had had a city charter four years, and Portsmouth one year. Manchester had eight Representatives in the Legislature; Portsmouth seven. The delegation from this city was a strong one. Among them were Hon. Ichabod Goodwin, afterwards Governor, and W. H. Y. Hackett, Esq., afterwards President of the Senate. 1860. Population 9335. Loss, 404. 1870. Population 9211. Loss 124.

The greatest population then was in 1850. In the two decades since, ending in 1870, the diminution has been 528. This is no indication of a diminution of enterprise or wealth. Much of the loss has unquestionably been owing to the painful fact that many deem it not advisable, proper or popular to have large families of children now as formerly. This wrong view will be, before long corrected. The Creator's arrangement to people, earth and Heaven itself, will be regarded as best.

Family Reading.

Show us the young man who can quit the society of the young, and take pleasure in listening to the kindly voice of age; show us a man who is ever ready to pity and help the deformed; show us a man who covers the faults of others with a mantle of charity; show us a man who bows as politely and gives the street as freely to the poor sewing girl as to the millionaire; who values virtue, not clothes, who shuns the company of such as congregate at public places to gaze at the fair sex, or to make unkind remarks of the passing poor girl; show us the man who abhors the libertine; who scorns the ridicule of his mother's sex, and the exposure of womanly reputation; show us the man who never forgets for an instant the delicacy and respect due a woman, as a woman, in any condition or class—and you show us a true gentleman.

Married people should treat each other like lovers all their lives—then they would be happy. Bickering and quarrelling would soon break up love affairs; consequently lovers indulge in such only to a limited extent. But some people—men and women both—when they have once got married think they may do just as they please, and it will make no difference. They make a great mistake. It will cause all the difference in the world. Women should grow more devoted and men more fond after marriage if they have the slightest idea of being happy as wives and husbands. It is losing sight of this fundamental truth which leads to hundreds of divorces. Yet many a man will scold his wife, who would never think of breathing a harsh word to his sweetheart; and many a wife would be glum and morose on her husband's return, who had only smiles and words of cheer for him when he was her suitor. How can such people expect to be happy.

Kind words never blister the tongue or lips; and we have never heard of one mental trouble arising from this quarter. Though they do not cost much, yet they accomplish much. They help one's good nature and good will. Soft words soften our own souls; angry words are fuel to the flame of wrath and make it blaze more fiercely. Kind words make other people good natured; cold words freeze people and hot words scorch them, and bitter words make them wrathful. There is such a rush of all other kinds of words in our days that it seems desirable to give kind words a chance among them. There are vain words and idle words, and hasty words and spiteful words, and silly words, and empty words, and profane words, and boisterous words, and warlike words. Kind words also produce their own image on men's souls; and a beautiful image it is. They soothe and quiet, and comfort the bearer. They shame him out of his sour, morose, unkind feelings. We have not yet begun to use kind words in such abundance as they ought to be used.

How graphically the varied aspects of the leaf picture the seasons of man's life. The tenderness of its budding and blooming in spring, when that rich golden green glints on it that comes only once a year, represents the bright beauty and innocence of youth, when every sunrise brings its fresh glad hopes, and every night its holy, trustful calm. The dark greenness and lush vigor of the summer season portray the strength and self reliance of manhood; while its fading hues on the trees and its rustling heaps on the ground, typify the decay and feebleness of old age, and that strange, mysterious passing away which is the doom of every mortal. The Autumn leaf is gorgeous in color, but it lacks the balmy scent and dewy freshness of hopeful spring; and life is rich and bright in its meridian splendor; deep are the hues of maturity, and noble is the beauty of success; but who would not give it all for the tender sweetness and promise of life's morning hours? Happy they who keep the child's heart warm and soft over the sad experience of old age, whose life declines as these last September days go out with the rich tints of autumn and the blue sunny skies of June!

A Strange Story.

[Philadelphia Sunday Dawn.]

A lady who was some years ago left a widow with a small family of children, after much tribulation, succeeded in bringing up to manhood one son, who proved himself able and willing to be a support not only to her but to his younger brothers and sisters. About a year after becoming of age he was offered a lucrative position in the West, and he emigrated thither, and, settling there permanently, soon married. New ties, however, did not absorb old affections, and, as he prospered in his business, he sent regularly to his mother the means necessary for her support and that of her family. The years passed on and brought many changes; but still regularly as the quarter came, so also did the ample remittance of this model son and brother. When the tide of emigration turned to the Far West, this son was carried with it to Omaha, where he invested his earnings in town lots, which speedily rose in value and made him a man of wealth. At least this was the intelligence sent his mother. Lately while visiting Auburn, his parent was invited to make the tour of the State Prison, and while passing through the various wards she accidentally encountered one whose presence caused her cheeks to pale and her heart to temporarily stop its beating. It was her son, her good and well-beloved boy who for years had been her pride and support; for a moment she was speechless, but at length bursting into a torrent of tears in which the prisoner joined, she said: "Oh, my son, my son! How came you here?" His story being told developed the fact that he had, by trading with strangers, come into possession of a large quantity of counterfeit money, and that in ignorance of its character, he being on a visit to New York, had attempted to pass it, had been arrested as a chief of a gang of counterfeiters, and having been identified as having endeavored to circulate it, was, in spite of all evidence of previous good conduct offered, convicted and sentenced to serve out a term in the State Prison. His wife, with whom he was in constant correspondence, had aided him in keeping his incarceration a secret from his mother, and had regularly remitted the quarterly allowance, together with letters forwarded from the prison by him. But for the unfortunate visit the mother would have remained forever unaware that her son was serving out a penal sentence for a crime never committed by him. She learned however, that by the rise of corner lots he had been made a wealthy man, and when he should come out of prison, which would be in a few months, he, through the skillful stewardship of his wife, would find awaiting him the sum of not less than $200,000 in United States bonds. Such are the vicissitudes of life.

The Ways of Writers.

James T. Fields, in his new lecture on "Fiction and its Eminent Authors," has the following concerning the habits of novel writers:

Hawthorne waited for moods, and mounted his tower stairs for composition only when the fit was on him. Dusky processions constantly moved about him as he mounted his piney hill-top, but his characters rarely spoke to him until he had locked his study door and shut out all ingress from the world of living beings. Anthony Trollope, whose novels Hawthorne greatly delighted in, writes every day regularly, when he is engaged on a new story, a given number of manuscript pages before 12 o'clock, and smiles at the idea of waiting until he "feels like writing," as it is called. Thackery was constantly studying character, and his observation was unceasing. His eyes were alert in the street, in the club, in society, everywhere. I remember one evening he whispered to me in a brilliant drawing-room: "How I envy you fellows who are not in my line and are not obliged to utilize professionally all the fine creatures for your next novel." Dickens was at one time so taken possession of by the characters of whom he was writing that they followed him everywhere, and would never let him be a moment. He told me that when he was writing the "Old Curiosity Shop" the creatures of his imagination so haunted him that they would neither allow him to sleep nor eat in peace; that Little Nell was constantly at his elbow, no matter where he might happen to be, claiming his attention and demanding his sympathy, as if jealous when he spoke to any one else. When he was writing "Martin Chuzzlewit," Mrs. Gramp kept him in such paroxysms of laughter by appearing in the most inopportune places, sometimes even in church, that he was compelled to fight her off by main force when he did not want her company, and threaten to have nothing more to do with her, unless she could behave better and come only when she was called.

Peculiar Springs.

Perhaps the most remarkable of the California Geyser Springs, is that called, happily enough, the Witches' Cauldron. This is a black, cavernous opening in the solid rock, about seven feet across, and of unknown depth, filled with a thick, inky liquid, boiling hot, that tumbles and roars under the pressure of escaping steam, emitting a smell like that of bilge water, and seems to proceed from some Pleutonic reservoir.

A clever photographer, Mr. Maybridge, conceived the idea of grouping three lady visitors about this cauldron, with hands linked, and alpen-stocks held like magic wands, in which position he photographed them amid the vaporous scene with telling effect. Another notable spot is the Devil's Gristmill, where a large column of steam escapes from a hole in a rock with so much force that stones and sticks laid in the aperture are blown away like bits of paper. The internal noises at this vent truly resemble the working of a gristmill. Milton's pen here is sponsor for another spring, called the Devil's Inkstand, notable for its black waters, specimens of which are taken off in small vials, and used at the hotel to inscribe the names of guests on the register.

New Life for the Languid.

Perfect health is vouchsafed to few. Probably ninety people out of every hundred who call themselves healthy have their "turns" of languor, exhaustion, depression of spirits and bodily pain. At these times a wineglassful of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is as refreshing as "the shadow of a rock in a weary land." It invigorates and rests the system and cheers the mind. The effect of the Bitters in cases of nervous debility, produced either by undue physical exertion, over-study, intense anxiety, or any other cause, is wonderfully reviving and invigorating. In fact, this healthful vegetable restorative possesses medicinal properties which entitle it to the rank of an article of prime necessity, and it should be kept on hand in every dwelling, and promptly taken as a remedy for all the minor ailments as well as for more serious complaints.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL,

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption.

The few compositions which have won the confidence of mankind, and become household words among not only one but many nations, must have extraordinary virtues. Perhaps no one ever secured a wide a reputation, or maintained it so long, as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It has been known to the public about forty years, by a long-continued series of marvellous cures, that have won for it a confidence in its virtues never equalled by any other medicine. It still makes the most effectual cures of COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION, that can be made by medical skill. Indeed, the CHERRY PECTORAL has really robbed these dangerous diseases of their terrors, to a great extent, and given a feeling of immunity from their fatal effects, that is well-founded, if taken in season. Every family should have it in their closet for the ready and prompt relief of its members. Sickness, suffering, and even life is saved by this timely protection. The prudent should not neglect it, and the wise will not. Keep it by you for the protection it affords by its timely use in sudden attacks.

Presentation.

Mr. Garrie H. Rheutan, who for four years past has been Foreman Boiler Maker at this Naval Station, was on Saturday evening the recipient of a valuable gold watch and chain from the workmen under his employ. Mrs. Rheutan was also remembered by being presented with a large and beautiful ring. Mr. R. has by his kindness o heart and gentlemanly deportment, won the love and respect of those under his charge, as well as all those connected with the Navy Yard. During his residence in our city, both he and his wife have gathered around them a host of friends who deeply regret their departure from our midst. Mr. Rheutan is to take charge of one of the largest boiler establishments in the country, that of H. B. Beach & Son, Hartford, Conn.

Temperance Proposition No. 2.

The use of ardent spirits as a beverage is criminal when it is with the purpose of debauching the body and inflaming lust. It is an error in the case of a person having been subjected to privations, exposures, hardships and the use of unnatural food. The error consists in resorting to unnatural stimulants, whereas nutrition is the only requisite. Doctor Charles A. Cheever, who was well known here when living, told me that in one hundred cases where people resorted to ardent spirits as a medicine, in 99 it was unnecessary to have done so; now if we can only bring to bear upon this evil of drunkenness the same communistic spirit which is now operating so beautifully and gloriously in financial matters, all need of the sword and violence in any form will become exceedingly narrowed in. Let us all labor until governments shall be so perfected as that they shall be wholly a positive force in reform and good doings.

Yours respectfully, HARD PAN.

As Dr. Chas. A. Norton, who has been active in endeavoring to close the liquor saloons, was walking down Market street, Sunday evening, he was met by a man who used insulting language to him, and threw a brick at him. The brick just grazed Dr. Norton's face, but did no damage.

It will be seen by an advertisement in another column that the Catholic Fair at St. Mary's Church is postponed till Monday next in consequence of the failure of the gas fixtures to arrive from New York. Quite extensive preparations are being made to make the Fair a success.

Keen's stage horse ran away with the vehicle they are wont to draw between Portsmouth and Kittery, Monday morning, starting from the depot and stopping on Bridge street, where they ran against and broke off two new posts in front of the store of Luke Quinland. Nobody hurt. Whiffle-tree and one spoke broken.

The religious interest in the Methodist Church, A. C. Hardy, pastor, seems unabated, and rather on the increase. Prayer meetings have been held each evening in the chapel on Daniel street for three weeks past, and will continue through this week. Several have been converted, and many others are deeply interested. No outside help is being employed, the pastor and church conducting and carrying on the meetings.

The police arrested a Frenchman, Saturday evening, on the charge of insulting and abusing ladies on the street. The fellow had been carrying on this infamous business for a week or more and frequent complaints had been made at the police station. He was held for a sufficient length of time for identification, and parties were notified of it, but the ladies in every case refused to appear as witnesses against him and he was discharged with orders to leave town.

Interesting Historical Document.

[Franklin Journal.]

"Pay Role of the Matross Company" stationed at the forts on Piscataqua river for the month of January, 1781."

The original pay roll with caption as above is in our possession. The names and ranks of the company are as follows: Ebenezer Dearing, Captain; Meshach Bell, Jr., Lieutenant; Elisha Wilson, Richard Ingerson, Edward Tredcik, Sergeants; John Fernald, Amos Smith, Corporals; William McKim, Thomas Healy, Joseph Buckford, John Hutchins, Bradstreat Chase, Joseph Wilson, Josiah Moore, John Leavet, William Nealy, William Oliver, Isaac Pridham, Benj. Yeaton, John Neal, Samuel Card, Robert Martin, privates. The monthly pay and subsistence was as follows: Captain £180; lieutenant, £100; sergeant, £59; corporal, £54. One sergeant, one corporal, and three privates, did not sign the roll. Three privates made their marks. The signatures are, taken together, better written than the pay roll of our army shows at the present day. On the back of the same sheet, which is of very thick, coarse paper, and about 8x12 inches in size, is the "Pay roll of enveleads stationed at Fort Washington for the month of January, 1781," three in number, Richard Harman, Peter Barker, Jonathan Morgan. This document is the property of Miss Statira Ayers of this town, who is a grand-niece of the Mrs. Fernald, Statira Ayers, who death is noted in the foregoing article.

Mrs. Fernald was a daughter of Joseph Ayers. Her mother, Miriam Frost of Kittery, was a grand-child of Andrew Pepperell, and a grand-niece of Sir William. Her sister, Mrs. Myra Ames, with whom she spent many of her last years, is 86 years old. Mrs. Fernald was an accomplished christian lady. She was educated in Portsmouth, and she carefully preserved the rare specimens of the needle work which she executed at that school in 1790.

The Matrosses are soldiers in a train of artillery next to the gunners, assisting them in loading, firing and sponging the guns, marching with the store wagons as guards and assistants.

COAL.

HAVING contracted for a quantity of the above coal, we would call the attention of Manufacturers, Dealers and Consumers to the following different grades mined and controlled by the Company:

HARD WHITE ASH COAL,
FREE BURNING WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN RED ASH COAL,
NORTH FRANKLIN COAL,
LYKENS VALLEY COAL.

In order that all coal shall be shipped in good order, a most rigid system of inspection, both at the mines and at the shipping ports, will at all times be enforced. In every district of the coal region there will be appointed a number of competent persons skilled in the preparation of coal, as local inspectors, whose duty it will be to visit the several collieries daily to see that a proper force is at all times employed in removing slate, and to prevent, if possible, any coal being sent from the mines in bad order. In addition to these efforts at prevention, no means will be left untried at the shipping ports to cure the evils of careless preparation. At Schuylkill Haven, Port Clinton and Port Richmond, ALL COAL WILL BE SUBJECTED TO THE PERSONAL EXAMINATION OF A SKILLED INSPECTOR BEFORE IT IS SHIPPED, and if condemned by him, will be dumped in places provided for the purpose, and before being loaded into vessels WILL BE THOROUGHLY REPICKED AND CLEANED BY HAND.

—Perhaps it was not amusing, to see John, the other night, singing contentedly to himself and crumbling bread into a bowl of starch which his wife had placed in the pantry, and saying there was nothing like bread and milk, after all. He found bread and starch was not, after all.

—Watch the first man you see purchasing a two cent apple from a street stand. He will pick out five and finally settle upon the first one he touched, after pulling the pile to pieces and knocking down the label, "2 cents apiece."

—A San Franciscan dropped tobacco-juice on his clean shirt-front, and his wife laid him out with her flat-iron. You may trifle with the weed for a while, but it's bound to fetch you sooner or later.

SEWING MACHINE

DOES A GREATER VARIETY OF WORK,

And is the Easiest Running and Most Perfect Shuttle Machine Made.

Parties in want of a good machine will do well to examine these before purchasing. Machines sold on installments at No. 6 Bridge street.

☞ Sewing Machines repaired at short notice.

WILLIAM CHITTLEY,
Agent for Portsmouth and vicinity.

The Singer Still Triumphant!

At the Vienna Exhibition, the SINGER received the Medal of Merit, the Medal of Progress, and three other Medals for superiority of productions. These are the highest Sewing Machine Awards at Vienna. The SINGER received all the medals awarded to either of the competing machines, and two medals more than any other obtained. Then, in the name of Truth, what is it that prompts people to claim recommendations for the Diploma of Honor? The fact is, no Diploma of Honor has been given to any Sewing Machine Company.

But immeasurably more valuable is The World's Award as shown by sales—proved by sworn returns to the owners of the principal Sewing Machine Patents—which last year amounted to TWO HUNDRED AND NINETEEN THOUSAND, SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHT (219,758) machines, nine out of ten of them being for Family Use. This is over 45,000 more Sewing Machines than were sold by any other company during the same period, and over One Quarter of all the machines sold in 1872. These enormous sales are owing to the long-tested merits of the Singer Machines, which meet the wants of the public in superiority and simplicity of construction, and capability for great variety and excellence of work. That the users of Sewing Machines find these decisive qualities in the Singer beyond all others, is shown by the sales above given, aside from the awards of International Juries, either at home or abroad.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, DROPSY AND HUMORS.

PERUVIAN SYRUP

Makes The Weak Strong.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaints, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building upon an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

AMERICAN & FOREIGN PATENTS.

R. H. EDDY,
SOLICITOR OF PATENTS,
For Inventions, Trade Marks or Designs.

NO. 76 STATE ST., OPPOSITE KILBY ST., BOSTON.

After an extensive practice of upwards of thirty years, continues to secure patents in the United States; also in Great Britain, France and other foreign countries. Caveats, Specifications, Assignments, and all papers for Patents, executed on reasonable terms with dispatch. Researches made to determine the validity and utility of Patents of Inventions, and legal and other advice rendered in all matters touching the same. Copies of the claims of any patent furnished, by remitting one dollar. Assignments recorded in Washington.

No Agency in the United States possesses superior facilities for obtaining Patents or ascertaining the patentability of inventions.

All necessity for a journey to Washington to procure a Patent and the usual great delay there, are here saved inventors.

TESTIMONIALS.

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse. CHARLES MASON, Commissioner of Patents."

"I have no hesitation in assuring inventors that they cannot employ a man more competent and trustworthy and more capable of putting their applications in a form to secure for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office.
EDMUND BURKE,
Late Commissioner of Patents."

"MR. R. H. EDDY has made for me over THIRTY applications for Patents, having been successful in almost every case. Such unmistakable proof of great talent and ability on his part leads me to recommend all inventors to apply to him to procure their Patents, as they may be sure of having the most faithful attention bestowed on their cases and at very reasonable charges.
JOHN TAGGART."

THE GREAT REMEDY FOR

CONSUMPTION!

And acknowledged by many prominent physicians to be the most Reliable Preparation ever introduced for the RELIEF and CURE of all

LUNG COMPLAINTS.

This well known remedy is offered to the public, sanctioned by the experience of over forty years, and when resorted to in season seldom fails to effect a speedy cure of

CONSUMPTION

CURED

By a timely resort to this standard remedy, as improved by hundreds of testimonials received by the proprietors.

Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry

Does not dry up a Cough and leave the cause behind, as is the case with most preparations, but it loosens and cleanses the lungs and allays irritation, thus removing the cause of the complaint.

CLERGYMEN, LAWYERS, SINGERS,

And all those whose occupation requires an unusual exercise of the vocal organs, will find this the ONLY PREPARATION which will effectually and instantaneously relieve their difficulties.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS.—Remember that the genuine Wistar's Balsam has on the outside wrapper the signature of "I. BUTTS," and the printed name of the proprietors, "SETH W. FOWLE & SONS, BOSTON." All others are base imitations. Examine the wrapper carefully before purchasing.

The Breeches Law Suits.

BABCOCK VS. STANTON—STANTON VS. BABCOCK.

The story which, in the following article, we have undertaken to tell, will interest many readers in the southern counties of Rhode Island and Connecticut. For five score years it has been a fireside tale in all the region—of course many variations have crept into it—and our plain narrative will, in many respects, differ from the popular tale. But we have drawn our story from the report of the trials published at the time, and which, by lapse of years, has now become exceedingly scarce. Probably very few people now living ever saw a copy. The one we used is the property of one of the learned Judges of our Supreme Court, who kindly loaned it for our purpose.

We do not fancy litigous men, those who will vex the courts with little matters. But we do confess to a sort of liking for the persistence of the elder Stanton, in defending the honor of his son. Had he paid the shillings demanded, he would have branded his son as a thief; he chose the other course, and paid thousands of silver dollars in his son's defence. Verily, "honor was not with him a sort of paper credit, which those who are deficient in the sterling cash of morality trade in."

It is a century since there lived in New Haven a merchant who carried on a shipping trade with the West Indies and other foreign ports, whose name was Adam Babcock. He was the son of Dr. Joshua Babcock, who lived in Westerly, and who was one of the most cultivated and well known country gentlemen in all the section lying between Boston and New York—a physician, a conversationalist, a well-read, scholarly man. An excellent account of him, written by Dr. Levi Wheaton, may be found in Updike's History of the Narragansett Church. From it we are tempted to extract a little picture of his family life:

"One of the most striking features of Dr. Babcock's character was his observance of method in everything in his business, his style of living, amusements or devotion. He was an early riser, and gave the morning hour to his farm. His breakfast was bread and milk with some apple pie or fruit of the season. While his housekeeper and I were taking a cup of excellent coffee with buttered toast, he would often rally us on our want of taste; 'better live as I do,' he would say; 'out of this old silver porringer and with this spoon I have taken my breakfast for forty years.' At dinner—and he kept an excellent table—he ate heartily, but always of one dish, be it roast or boiled, fish or flesh; as he began so he ended. He took cider as his common beverage, and a temperate glass of good wine. At tea, of which he was very fond, he drank exactly three cups. At a regular supper table, the fashion of those days, whatever company he might entertain, after due attention to his guests, he confined himself invariably to his porringer of bread and milk. He was a person not above the middle size, of a rather spare habit, light and active, for a man of his years. He could mount a horse of sixteen hands high with the agility of a boy. In his dress and manners he was a gentleman of the old school; scrupulously polite, often quoted Chesterfield, who was then in his zenith. He perhaps laid too much stress upon trifling ceremonies; to eat cheese with bread and butter, or to drink more than three cups of tea, he would consider ill-bred. At the close of the week, his family were called into the sitting-room to hear a chapter read from the Bible and a prayer; observing at some of these readings what I thought a deviation from the common language of the Bible, I had the curiosity to look into the one he made use of, and found it Greek."

Dr. Babcock had three sons, Henry, Luke and Adam. Henry was a colonel in the revolutionary army, Luke was a clergyman, and became a tory; of him we speak hereafter. Adam was a merchant and the plaintiff in the Leather Breeches Law Suit, about which we now write. He owned a brig which he was about dispatching to the West Indies and thence to the Bay of Honduras; being in want of sailors and learning by his brother Henry of the virtues in that line of a young man who lived at Stonington by the name of Phineas Stanton, Jr., he wrote to him a letter, and the result was the engagement of young Stanton in Babcock's brig as mate for the voyage. The vessel arrived at St. Croix, where Stanton wished to land, and also wished some money to expend on shore. For that purpose he asked of Babcock a portion of his wages. High words ensued and a quarrel began, which lasted during the remainder of their lives, and cost each of them thousands of dollars.

On his arrival at New Haven, Stanton had considerable difficulty in effecting a settlement with Babcock, and claims finally to have been cheated out of about twenty pounds. Still the matter was settled, as the Stantons supposed, finally. But scarcely had young Stanton arrived at his home, near Stonington, than the Sheriff, in the person of Capt. Simon Rhodes, came with a process to arrest him upon a charge made by Babcock of embezzling the following articles, to wit: A pair of leather breeches, a glass mustard-pot, a bottle with gunpowder and a quantity of old iron. The Sheriff was authorized to settle the matter with Stanton upon his paying the small sum of perhaps twenty shillings. In the course of the trials, it appeared that young Stanton had bought some pieces of firewood of Babcock while on the voyage, and the old iron was the nails, &c., which had remained in the ashes. Babcock had evidently not read the decision of the case Shylock vs. Antonio, else he would not have set up the claims that he sold the old wood yet sold no old nails which the wood contained. But there being some question whether the title to the old nails did not remain in Stanton, Babcock withdrew this charge. In regard to the old mustard-pot, worth, according to the statement, one shilling, it was proved to have been taken by young Stanton from Babcock's house to Babcock's brig for the use of Babcock's employes, on Babcock's table, and to have been there left when the young man left the brig, and so Babcock withdrew that charge. In regard to the gunpowder, it was proved to have been bought and paid for by young Stanton before he left New Haven on the voyage, and so Babcock withdrew that charge. Babcock's bill was now reduced to the single item of one pair of leather breeches, worth in the first place sixteen shillings, but which, being very dirty, needed a washing, which cost three shillings, that would reduce their value in the first place to thirteen shillings, and on these breeches the tremendous law fight took place.

To unravel the story of these breeches, from the prolix narrative of the elder Stanton, who, according to his own statement was "neither a grammarian, an attorney, nor indeed, so much as a pettifogger," has been our laborious task, with what success, we leave our readers to judge. And we rest easily in the belief that if it takes them as long to find an original copy with which to compare our story as it did us, our punishment will be far distant, if we have misstated the case or stated it unfairly.

Babcock practically charged young Stanton with having stolen certain things belonging to him (Babcock), and Stanton could not pay the paltry sum which Babcock demanded, without acknowledging himself a thief. The elder Stanton was one of those stern old fellows, who, rather than see his son disgraced, would expend thousands in his defence—and he joined his son in the fight.

The report of these celebrated trials, (there were nine), is comprised in a stout pamphlet of 168 pages, closely printed in very small type, enlivened with copious extracts from Shakspeare, Hudibras, South's Sermons, Pope, Machiavelli, The Spectator, The Bible, Milton and many other authors. The pamphlet is not divided into chapters; there is no break in the subject from beginning to appendix, and thence to the end; the various trials are not separated; the evidence runs along, then comes a decision; then Stanton's discussions, and then the same repeated. As we have before stated, it has been with the utmost difficulty that we have unraveled the story, but we believe we have finally accomplished it.

The story of these various trials and their results is briefly told as follows: Babcock commenced proceedings by serving an attachment upon young Stanton for embezzling certain things, to wit, a pair of leather breeches, a glass mustard pot, some old iron, and half a pound of gunpowder—the verdict declared Stanton not guilty. Stanton now sued Babcock for defamation of character. Babcock pleaded justification. The jury gave Stanton a verdict with one hundred pounds damages and costs. Babcock appealed to the Superior Court at Norwich. The case was again heard and again went against Babcock with a verdict for seventy-five pounds and costs, but the court considering the damages too much, returned the case to the jury for a second consideration, which resulted in reducing the amount of damages awarded to Stanton to fifty pounds. Babcock moved an arrest of judgment, but the court adjourned without a hearing on the motion. Two or three months after, the court heard the argument on this motion, decided the plea insufficient, and issued execution. Babcock now petitioned the court to give him a new trial of the first case against Stanton for embezzlement, which had been decided in Stanton's favor. The court granted a new trial, the result of which was in Babcock's favor; the jury declared Stanton guilty and gave damages thirty-six shillings and costs. Upon this result Stanton petitioned for a new trial. This petition was continued along for four years and was finally granted. In the meantime Babcock petitioned the court for a new trial of the case of Stanton against him for defamation, which case had been decided against Babcock; this petition the court refused to grant. Babcock then petitioned the General Assembly of Connecticut to open the whole case. This petition the General Assembly refused to grant. Babcock had also meantime sued Stanton to recover certain moneys he had paid in connection with the suits. The case came on for trial at a time when Stanton, supposing it was to be continued, was not present. It went by default in Babcock's favor, with ten or eleven pounds damages.

Now came on the new trial which had been granted to Stanton. It was a trial of the original case against him for embezzlement. The first result was in Stanton's favor; the second result was in Babcock's favor; the third and final result was in Stanton's favor. A special session of the Superior Court was held for its trial. Every effort was made to produce evidence and witnesses on the part of the Stantons. Messengers were sent hundreds of miles on horseback to take depositions, and by sea to St. Croix; leather breeches were brought from Philadelphia, the Jerseys, New York,

Norwich, New London and even those made in England, the minute stitches were compared, whether made of one or two deerskins, what kind of buttons were used, and every particular which could be thought of in connection with breeches was discussed. Thus ended the litigation. The cases had been nine years before the courts in various phases, and the best legal talent of Connecticut had been employed on either side.

More failures in New York and renewed excitement.

At 10. 10 A. M., Tuesday, fire was discovered in the northerly car shed of the Eastern Railroad at Boston. Conductor Laighton's train of twelve cars had been housed there but a short time. The station agent with assistants succeeded in saving seven of the cars, but the flames drove them off before the others could be run out. Great difficulty was experienced in reaching the fire. The car-shed was destroyed and the railroad bridge was badly charred, necessitating the relaying of one track. A pile of sleepers belonging to the Boston & Maine Railroad was charred. Total loss about $30,000. Trains to this city were not delayed.

The residents of Newton, Mass., have adopted a city charter granted by the present legislature by a majority of 833 out of a total of 1615 votes. In the evening there was a torchlight procession, with bands of music and congratulatory speeches at all the villages.

A naval engagement took place Saturday, near Cartagena, between the insurgent fleet and the government squadron, resulting in the defeat of the rebels and their flight into Cartagena harbor.

On Sunday morning a car filled with heavy western oxen was thrown upon a side track in making up a train, at the Eastern Railroad station in Portland, when, from some cause, the moving train on a contiguous track caught the end of the cattle car and upset it. The cattle were hauled out with ropes, and the backs and legs of several were broken.

A wonderful conductor on the elevated railway in New York was arrested, on complaint of an individual whom he refused to allow to ride, because the car was already full. Strange enough, he is supported by the company in his singular action.

The Connecticut town elections appear to have turned out well. The republicans have obtained control of eighty-three towns, and in nineteen others they have equal power with the opposition. The democrats carried sixty-three towns and the independents one. The republicans elect 259 selectmen, the democrats 225, the liberals eight and the independents six. Of the town clerks the republicans have ninety-three, the democats sixty-eight, the liberals two, and the independents four.

The floating island which has been for several years moored to the land on the north side of Upper Scott's pond, Lonsdale, R. I., became detached during the recent storm and strong northeast wind, and has floated to the extreme south side of the pond, a distance of an eighth of a mile from its former location. It was supposed by most of the people that this island had become permanently attached to the land by the roots from the trees and shrubs growing thereon. At one time, years ago, it was situated near the centre of the pond for a long time, and at other times it has floated hither and thither by every strong wind. Trees of considerable size are growing upon it.

A freight train running out of Detroit killed a cow, and the Associated Press reporter, who misses nothing of general interest, put it in his dispatches. The harrowing news flashed through Cincinnati, causing the greatest excitement on street and 'Change, and bringing tears to the eyes of wives and daughters. It reached Memphis, and the mourners forgot to bury their dead, to lament over this new visitation of heavenly wrath. But the message flew on in its lightning path to the Gulf, until stopped by the instruments in New Orleans. Then the citizens rose up in their manly indignation and anger, and thundered, as with one voice; "How long is Grant to continue these villainous wrongs?"

Ex-Governor John M. Palmer of Illinois has written a letter to say that in his opinion questions like that of the mode of the observance of the Sabbath are beyond the rightful domain of legislation, and that every person should be permitted without legal hindrance to determine for himself on that, as on all other days, how he will employ his time, only that he shall not in any sense invade the liberties of others.

That wonderful Tichborne case grows still more wonderful. It will be remembered that the defense have all along insisted that the claimant was Arthur Orton. And now arrives in England an individual who claims that he is Arthur Orton. Tichborne bonds will go up.

The annual estimates for the assessing and collecting of the internal revenue will be a million dollars less than last year. It was then expressed that there would be a saving of one million dollars as a result of reducing the collecting districts. It was found that this consolidation was not practicable, and in its place the present system, devised by Commissioner Douglass, was adopted. This, it is believed, will effect a saving of two millions over the expense of collecting the revenue before the consolidation of districts began.

State News.

The house, stable, barn and outbuildings of D. M. Taggart, at Goffstown, were burned Monday night. Seventeen blood horses worth $30,000 perished. The buildings were valued at $10,000, on which there was $7000 insurance.

Hon. B. F. Prescott, secretary of State, has received a note from Henry Ledyard of Newport, R. I., son-in-law of General Cass, stating that the general's heirs propose to give an original portrait by Healy of him to Phillips Exeter Academy. Hon. Peter C. Brooks of Boston has presented a portrait of Edward Everett to the academy.

There is a good deal of excitement in Nashua among those who send children to the public schools, growing out of a severe and merciless whipping in one of the grammar schools. The school buildings are overcrowded, and temporary quarters have been secured in Telegraph block, and a Miss Forsaith installed as teacher. On Saturday, she kept a small child, Mary Carey, after school, took her into the entry and beat her with a raw hide about the head and body till she was unable to walk, and a police officer was obliged to carry her home. The child is confined to her bed, and though severely injured, will undoubtedly recover soon. The teacher punished the girl for being late to school. The parents say the child was kept at home longer than usual to assist her mother.

Col. H. D. Pierce, of Hillsborough, has commenced a suit against the county to recover one-half of the fines received by the county in liquor prosecutions in which he was the complainant.

Two Nashua boys were gouged out of all their money by a three-card monte sharp, who was magnanimous and returned it, saying: "Oh, bless you, boys, I don't want your money. I was only playing the game for fun." The money given back was counterfeit.

Trotting at Fairs.

Rev. Mr. Murray has an article in the Congregationalist in reference to trotting at fairs, from which the following is an extract:

"Another change in the management, especially of the New England Society, is in reference to the giving of purses to be trotted for by the professionals. For one, I hold that no purses should be given, and no trotting by professionals allowed. Trotting we must have and should have. The ability to go fast is one of the very chiefest excellences of a horse. The Creator designed him for speed, and speed he is sure to have if he is properly bred. There are times when the necessities of social and business life require rapid locomotion, and nothing can meet these necessities so well as a fast, well-bred horse. It is astonishing what a love some people about this time seem to have for slow horses, and what a terrible fright they are in lest our community should go to bad behind fast ones. I would like to buy their horses for these very conservative gentlemen. I know an animal up in Connecticut that I would like to purchase for a certain editor; and then I would like to stand behind the corner of some house on Brighton road and see him try to get that horse along. It would please me more than to heap coals of fire on his head. It would be a safe horse for an editor like him to own. So far as speed goes it wouldn't hurt his moral character to drive him, even at the New England Fair. If he had good luck, and the horse felt lively, he might get him round the track in an hour and a half. His character for piety, provided he kept his mouth shut, would be safe. But if the horse should happen to feel a little dull, and the poor man could not restrain his feelings, and once got his mouth open and should go to talking to that animal, I wouldn't give a cent for his reputation as a mild-spoken man. A lazy horse will start more irregular thoughts in a man's mind than any other animal I know.

But while I believe in fast horses, and hold that the ability to speed rapidly is one of their greatest excellences, as is plainly declared in the spirit and structure which the Lord has given them and hence that trotting and running at the top of their speed at our annual fairs are germane to the exhibition of them, still I do not believe in offering purses to be trotted for by outside horses in no other respect connected with the exhibition. Trotting there should be; but the trotting should be done only by horses entered for the regular premiums of the society, and only as a part of the legitimate exhibition of their comparative excellences. This would exclude the professionals from our agricultural fairs, where they do not belong, to their own courses and company, where they do belong; and in addition to other advantages, would prevent them from monopolizing a large portion of valuable time which in right belongs to the bona fide exhibitors of stock. The true position to take, then, as I understand the matter, is; Banish all professional trotting for purses. Let the exhibition for speed be demanded of all horses that contend for the highest premiums.

The Great August Storm.

A report of the damage by the storm of August 24 shows that 1032 vessels, of which 435 were small fishing schooners, are known to have been destroyed in the neighborhood of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Atlantic shores of Nova Scotia, Cape Breton and Newfoundland. In addition to this number over 90 vessels were destroyed by the same storm before reaching Nova Scotia, making a total of 1122 vessels destroyed within a few days. Two hundred and twenty-three lives are reported lost, and the most moderate estimate of the numerous cases in which crews are stated to be lost swell this number to nearly 500, while, if to this be added the loss on land and in the earlier history of the cyclone, this grand total amounts to at least 600 lives. The records also show that about 900 buildings were injured or totally destroyed in the same dates by this storm. The fishing interests of the United States and Canada are seriously crippled by these losses, which have fallen with especial severity upon Gloucester and other New England towns.

Down From A Balloon.

[George Ashton Lunt in N. Y. Graphic.]

While consulting as to the best method of evading the mountain region and its changeable currents, we were suddenly enveloped in a thick cloud, and an instant later a terrific squall of wind and rain caught the balloon, twisting and shaking it so violently that I own that I deemed its almost instant destruction certain, and in another moment we were whirled off we knew not whither. The great bag above us flapped and boomed like the sails of a ship when too close hauled and every convulsion was echoed from the interior and prolonged into a dull and ominous roar. That the moment was one of extreme danger I could not for a moment doubt, but the horrible noise above and the hissing below of the wind over the tops of the still invisible trees rendered conversation almost impossible.

I was standing in the bow of the boat at this time; Mr. Ford was in the centre, and Mr. Donaldson in the cockpit. Suddenly the latter shouted "Look out! Be ready to jump when I tell you," and the next instant the green tree tops swept past the boat on either side. At this moment we descended out of the cloud, and I saw that we were falling—literally falling—into a small open space between two pieces of woodland. In an instant I had dropped over the side of the boat and was holding on to the gunwale and a glance showed my companions to be also in readiness behind me. Down we came, the balloon driven furiously earthward by the seemingly perpendicular gale, and the boat spinning about like a mere chip. Suddenly Donaldson shouted, "Jump out, quick!" and suited the action to the word, followed in another second by Ford. I heard the double thud with which they struck the earth with horror, and all that Donaldson had told me of the difficulty of judging distance after an ascent flashed through my mind, and I turned my head to see the effect of their fall.

They were both rising from the grass, but my readers may judge my sensations when I saw that they were a hundred feet below me and the balloon was shooting into the air again. One second of indecision, and I swung myself upon the boat and shouted to Mr. Donaldson, "What shall I do!" The fury of the storm, however, drowned my voice and his, and in another moment I was again in the clouds, which were so thick that even the great bag above me was invisible. The time from Mr. Donaldson's first warning until now could not have exceeded thirty seconds; yet there I was, alone, in the largest balloon ever successfully inflated, and perfectly gnorant practically of its management. For a short time I stood absently clutching the ropes and wondering what was to become of me, but soon felt that my safety depended upon prompt action, and began to think what had better be done. Should I cut off the great drag rope, ascend above the storm, and trust to luck, to make another landing in a smoother country? I drew my knife for the purpose, but remembered that I had asked several aeronauts what would be the effect of such a sudden lightening of a balloon, and they each said it would probably burst. As I had no desire to include this performance in my impromptu programme, the knife was returned to its sheath and the valve resorted to. The cord was tangled by the neck of the balloon, and for some time my entire weight was apparently inadequate to open it.

It appears, however, this was an error of judgment on my part, and that I did really open the valve. This must have been the case, for in a short time the extension of the drag rope at an acute angle showed me that the balloon had again descended, and I began to anxiously peer through the mist for signs of the earth. They came with a vengeance. The roar of the storm over the trees became audible again, and a moment later the balloon emerged from the cloud, and I saw myself nearing the forest with alarming rapidity. I had let out too much gas from the valve, and the balloon was descending even faster than before. I had barely time to climb into the concentrating ring when the boat was dashed against a tall tree; the balloon straightened out in a line with the wind, and away went the whole machine, bumping and crashing over the tree tops, your artist-correspondent studying the topography of the surrounding country with great energy, and feeling a newly-awakened but deep interest in the heretofore neglected subjects of timber, meadow and ploughed ground. Watching my opportunity, I swung myself into a tree at a moment when the boat and rigging were so entangled as to deaden the way of the balloon, but before I could make myself secure, it again broke loose, and, some of the gear coming in contact with my hands, scraped me off.

Under ordinary circumstances, a gentleman in thin boots and minus hat and coat would consider a two-mile walk in a pouring rain, over swampy ground, with incidental fence-climbing, ditch-wading, etc., a just cause for invective against the thousand ills that flesh is heir to. Whether the statement that I never enjoyed a walk so much before in my life will be received simply as evidence that I am one of those rare beings who accept without grumbling the dispensations of Providence, I know not. The circumstance may be attributed to meekness or eccentricity, as my readers please. It is a fact, however, which I will maintain till my dying day, that, of all the pedestrianism in which I have heretofore engaged for purposes of pleasure—not even those well remembered evenings "by moonlight alone" with her by my side—none ever gave me more unalloyed joy, nor did I ever labor more cheerfully for the emolument of Crispins than in those two wet, sloppy, beggy miles to the nearest station, where I found my companions busy writing telegrams of my probable death.

—A very funny story is told by the Chicago Tribune about the Bucyrus Forum, a patent inside newspaper printed in Ohio, which has come to grief all on account of its insides. The Bucyrus Forum is described as one of the straight-laced, never-say-die, roaring democratic newspapers, and is a staunch supporter of Allen, the democratic canndidate for governor of Ohio. But last week among the faithful in Bucyrus there was great consternation when they read in the patent inside the following paragraph:

The great antiquity of Bill Allen is beyond question, as Homer speaks of him under the alias of "Stentor." After Noyes takes some of the wind out of him, it is said he will be offered a situation to act as a fog-horn on the Rhode Island coast.

The editor tried to make an apology and explain the patent insides, but the countrymen will understand nothing except that the above paragraph was in the Bucyrus Forum, and that the Bucyrus Forum is recommending Bill Allen for a fog-horn on the Rhode Island coast. They won't be comforted. The Forum is a backslider, a traitor, a black republican, and they are abandoning the Bucyrus Forum to its fate, certain that it will come to some ignominious end.

Business Notices.

Vegetine is perfectly harmless from any bad effect on the system.

To break up Colds, Fevers, Inflammatory and Bilious Attacks, take a full cathartic dose of Dr. Pierce's Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets when the attack first comes on, and follow with two or three Pellets each day until a perfect cure is effected. They cure these causes by removing all the secretions, relieving obstructions, thus reducing the action of the heart, relieving the congested blood-vessels, softening the pulse, producing gentle perspiration, and subduing the heat and fever. Twenty five cents a vial, by all Druggists.

Troops of Ailments Vanquished.

On account of the promptness with which it checks the fevers generated by unhealthy exhalations, Hostetter's Bitters is considered an indispensable family medicine on the borders of our Southern and Western rivers, and in new settlements where the plough and the axe are for the first time disturbing the solitudes of nature. Its reputation, however, is not confined to such localities. Wherever the elements of disease are rife it is the surest safeguard of health; wherever sickness prevails, it is efficacious as a remedy. Among the serious diseases which it is guaranteed to control are indigestion, biliousness, and all the minor ailments connected with derangements of the stomach, the liver, and the Bowels—such as heartburn, headache, flatulence, costiveness, nausea, distaste for food, languor and debility, palpitation of the heart, trembling of the hands, noises in the ears, disordered vision, disturbed sleep, and mental inquietude. As these physical and mental disturbances tend to a general failure of all the powers of the system, they should be at once corrected, as they always may be, by a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL,

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption.

The few compositions which have won the confidence of mankind, and become household words among not only one but many nations, must have extraordinary virtues. Perhaps no one ever secured a wide a reputation, or maintained it so long, as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It has been known to the public about forty years, by a long-continued series of marvellous cures, that have won for it a confidence in its virtues never equalled by any other medicine. It still makes the most effectual cures of COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION, that can be made by medical skill. Indeed, the CHERRY PECTORAL has really robbed these dangerous diseases of their terrors, to a great extent, and given a feeling of immunity from their fatal effects, that is well-founded, if taken in season. Every family should have it in their closet for the ready and prompt relief of its members. Sickness, suffering, and even life is saved by this timely protection. The prudent should not neglect it, and the wise will not. Keep it by you for the protection it affords by its timely use in sudden attacks.

Messrs. Norton & Leavitt have made, this year, under the management of Mr. Wm. Lydston, about two and one quarter millions brick at their yard in York.

Rev. Charles E. Why?

Here is a question. Can any of our readers solve it?

The Sensation.

[Gazette, Worcester, Mass., August 23d.]

Mechanics Hall was well filled last evening, and a very enthusiasm audience saw the acts of Washburn's Last Sensation Company. Some excellent gymnastic evolutions on the horizontal bar, and in "brother act," were neatly done, and Hurdle, a daring athlete, made the "sensation" by his head downward walking and dashing trapeze act at the roof of the hall. A variety programme filled out the quite long exhibition. The company is to be increased by the addition of an Indian Troupe, and expect to visit Worcester again next month.

Laconics.

The government appropriation for improving the channel of the river at Dover has been spent. The bed of the river has been deepened four feet, over a space forty feet in width and some dozen rods in length. More money will be needed to complete the work.

There was a very pleasant gathering at 63 State street, Monday evening, the residence of A. C. Hardy, pastor, of the M. E. Church. Quite a number of his friends taking advantage of his birthday, gathered at his house in the evening, and tendered to him happy greetings accompanied with a roll of greenbacks amounting to $50, to refresh him in his pilgrimage, and help to keep their memories green. The testimonial shows the cordial good feeling that exists between Mr. Hardy and his church. This society is now in a very prosperous and flourishing condition. The congregation is rapidly growing in members, and the society in influence.

Max Adeler.

[Sat. Eve. Post.]

Slimmer really deserves pity, for it certainly was uncommonly rough on him. He was going up to Reading the other day, and when he reached the depot he happened to look into the ladies' room. A woman sat there with a lot of baggage and three children, and when she saw Slimmer she rushed at him, and before he could defend himself she flung her arms about his neck, nestled her head upon his breast, and burst into tears. Slimmer was amazed, indignant, confounded; and 'ere he could find utterance for his feelings, she exclaimed: "Oh, Henry! Dear Henry! We are united at last. Are you well? Is Aunt Martha still alive? Haven't you longed to see your own Louisa?" And she looked into Slimmer's face and clung to him and smiled through her tears.

"Madam," said he, solemnly, "if I am the person alluded to as 'Henry,' permit me to say that you have made a mistake. My name is Lemuel; I have no Aunt Martha, and I don't own a solitary Louisa. Oblige me by letting go my coat, it excites remarks."

Then she buried her bonnet deeper into his waistcoat, and began to cry harder than ever, and said, "Oh, Henry, how, how can you treat me so? How can you pretend you are not my husband?"

"Madam," screamed Slimmer, "if you do not cease sopping my shirt bosom and remove your umbrella from my corns, I shall be obliged to call the police. Let me go, I say."

"The children are here," she persisted. "They recognize their dear father. Don't you, children?"

"Yes, yes," they exclaimed, "it's pa, it's our dear pa." And then they grappled Slimmer by the trowsers leg and hung to his coat tail.

"Woman," he shrieked, "this is getting serious. Unhand me I say." And he tried to disengage himself from her embrace—while all the brakemen, and the baggage master, and the newsboys stood around and said his conduct was infamous. In the midst of the struggle a stranger entered with a carpet bag. He looked exactly like Slimmer—and when he saw his wife in Slimmer's arms he became excited, and floored Slimmer with the carpet bag, and sat on him, and smote his nose and caromed on his head, and asked him what he meant. Slimmer was removed on a stretcher, and the enemy went off with his wife and family in a cab. He called next day to apologize. His wife made the mistake because of Slimmer's likeness to him. And now Slimmer wishes he may soon be kicked in the face by a mule so that he will resemble no other human being on earth.

Out of Law and Unhappy.

[Vermont Citizen.]

The editor of this paper and Gen. W. W. Grout have settled up their law suits. They love each other now. We have withdrawn our suit against him, paying our own costs, and he paying his own. He has withdrawn his libel suit also, and pays all the costs. The cases were settled by the attorneys of both parties to suit themselves. One of the agreements entered into was, that in our notice of the settlement we should not abuse the Grout. There was no need of such a stipulation, and we feel hurt to think that they should distrust us. We have no disposition to do so. Any man who has waded, as he has, through seas of gore to bear aloft the flag of his country, flaunting it full in the face of a terrible foe, deserves well of us; and the public may rest assured that we shall "go for him" always.

Well, we are out of law now, for the first time in five years. We feel lost. Won't some gentleman, or gentlemen, please to sue us? We ain't well under the present arrangement.

Portsmouth Chronicle.

The Logic of Debt.

The St. Louis Republican makes the following remarks, which may be considered a very good illustration of the way supposed wealthy men fail: "The mistake which our people are continually making, over and over again, is that of imagining that they can grow rich by going in debt—that they are rich if they own houses, farms and stocks, even though they are in debt to a half or three quarters the value of them A man who owns $100,000 worth of property, and owes $50,000 of debt imagines he is pretty well off, and is supposed by his acquaintances to be rich. But is he? By mathematical calculation he appears to be worth $50,000, since his debts amount to one-half his estimated possessions. But the fierce logic of a legal reckoning tells a different story As long as skies are bright, confidence unimpaired and business prosperous—so long, in short, as his creditors do not want their money— he manages easily to go through all the forms of being rich. But he forgets one important fact, on which the whole question hinges, that his debts cannot depreciate one-half. A $1,000 debt cannot grow smaller by any financial disturbance that takes place; but a $1,000 piece of property, whether it be a farm or a railroad bond, if put up at a forced sale for cash, at a time when money is scarce and nobody wants to buy, may not bring more than $500. This is the simple explanation of the constantly recurring fact that $100,000 worth of property, when forced into market by the sheriff or administrator, only pays $50,000 of debts, and leaves the man who imagined himself rich absolutely penniless."

The Singer Still Triumphant!

At the Vienna Exhibition, the SINGER received the Medal of Merit, the Medal of Progress, and three other Medals for superiority of production. These are the highest Sewing Machine Awards at Vienna. The SINGER received all the medals awarded to either of the competing machines, and two medals more than any other obtained. Then, in the name of Truth, what is it that prompts people to claim recommendations for the Diploma of Honor? The fact is, no Diploma of Honor has been given to any Sewing Machine Company.

But immeasurably more valuable is The World's Award as shown by sales—proved by sworn returns to the owners of the principal Sewing Machine Patents—which last year amounted to TWO HUNDRED AND SEVENTEEN THOUSAND, SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHT (219,758) machines, nine out of ten of them being for Family Use. This is over 45,000 more Sewing Machines than were sold by any other company during the same period, and over One Quarter of all the machines sold in 1872. These enormous sales are owing to the long-tested merits of the Singer Machines, which meet the wants of the public in superiority and simplicity of construction, and adaptability for great variety and excellence of work. That the users of Sewing Machines find these desirable qualities in the Singer beyond all others, is shown by the sales above given, aside from the awards of International Juries, either at home or abroad.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, DROPSY AND HUMORS.

PERUVIAN SYRUP

Makes The Weak Strong.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and carries it to the wasted parts, simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all Diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building upon an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

Daily Chronicle.

Circumstantial Testimony.
[New York Evening Post.]

Mr. Leonard Sargent, of Manchester, Vt., formerly active in politics, and once lieutenant governor of that state, has published a pamphlet containing a narrative of and the evidence in a famous murder case which occurred early in the present century. Mr. Sargent was one of the counsel for the defence. In 1812 there lived in Manchester a man named Barney Boorn, who had two sons, Stephen and Jesse, and a son-in-law named Russell Colvin, all living with him. Colvin was an eccentric man, supposed to be insane at times, and frequently absented himself for days without notice and without giving any account of his adventures. At last he was missing so long that people began to make inquiries, and suspicions of foul play were aroused. Months and years passed, and yet there was no explanation of Colvin's absence. Some of the neighbors remembered that the Boorn brothers, very shortly after his disappearance, had declared that Colvin was dead, and that they had "put him where potatoes would not freeze." They had not been on good terms with him, and this added to the prejudice against them.

Singularly enough, other circumstances began to accumulate against the brothers. Some children found a dilapidated hat, which was recognized as the one Colvin wore at the time of his disappearance. Search was then made for the bones of the supposed murdered man. Soon afterwards a dog uncovered some bones beneath an old stump, which at first were pronounced to be human bones, but subsequently were found not to be. An uncle of the boys had a dream in which Colvin came to his bedside and told him that he had been murdered. A barn in the neighborhood was mysteriously burned, and it was at once conjectured that the murdered man had been buried under it, and that the fire was intended to destroy all traces of the crime. All these circumstances added to the excitement against the Boorns. Stephen was then out of the State, but Jesse was arrested. He confessed that Stephen had told him a short time previously that he and Colvin had quarrelled, and that he had killed Colvin by a blow on the head. The people of the neighborhood and for miles around spent the next few days in another search for Colvin's bones, but none were found.

Stephen Boorn was brought home. He denied the statement of Jesse and asserted his innocence. The brothers were imprisoned to await the meeting of the grand jury. The principal witness before that body was a forger, who had been confined in jail with Boorn. He reported in detail a confession of the murder by Jesse Boorn, and both the boys were indicted. This was in September, 1819, more than seven years after the disappearance of Colvin. In November the trial took place. Meanwhile Stephen was induced by the remarks upon the hopelessness of their case to confess the crime, in the expectation of mercy from the court. This confession was the chief evidence against them. Notwithstanding that it was drawn out by hope of obtaining a more favorable verdict, and that nobody had been found as a proof of the murder, or even that Colvin was dead, the brothers were convicted and sentenced to be hanged on the 28th of January, 1820. The character of the evidence upon which they were convicted will attract the attention of lawyers at this time as showing what remarkable changes have taken place in criminal jurisprudence. So decisive did the testimony against them appear to be that the mother of the convicts was expelled from the Baptist church and the father was held as a prisoner for a time, upon the suspicion that they must have been accessory to the murder. A few of the citizens, who were disposed to be merciful, signed a petition for the commutation of the sentence against the Boorns. The legislature voted to change the sentence of Jesse to imprisonment for life, but refused to interfere with that of Stephen. It occurred to Stephen in an interview with his counsel that it would be a good plan to advertise for Colvin in the newspapers. Up to that point his counsel had believed him guilty, but he assured them that his confession was untrue and that he was innocent. The following notice was therefore printed in the Rutland Herald:—

"MURDER.—Printers of newspapers throughout the United States are desired to publish that Stephen Boorn, of Manchester, in Vermont, is sentenced to be executed for the murder of Russell Colvin, who has been absent about seven years. Any person who can give information of said Colvin may save the life of the innocent by making immediate communication. Colvin is about five feet five inches high, light complexion, light-colored hair, blue eyes, about forty years of age.

Manchester, Vt., Nov. 26, 1819."

Newspapers travelled slowly then, and Stephen's friends had but little hope that this would save him even if his story was true. Three days afterward, says Mr. Sargent's pamphlet, the New York Evening Post copied it, and "the next day it happened that the notice was read aloud in one of the hotels in New York. Another man standing near named Whelpley, said he had formerly lived in Manchester, and was well acquainted with Colvin, and related many anecdotes and peculiarities concerning him. Mr. Tabor Chadwick of Shrewsbury, N. J., was also standing near and listened to the conversation, which made a deep impression upon his mind. On thinking the matter over after his return home it occurred to him that a man then living with his brother-in-law, Mr. William Polhemus of Dover, New Jersey, answered exactly the description of Colvin as given by Whelpley." Finally he wrote a letter to the Evening Post, giving his conclusions. Whelpley saw it, went to Dover, identified Colvin, and after great effort, induced him to visit Manchester. There was great rejoicing in the town, and Stephen Boorn was brought from prison to fire the cannon that celebrated his deliverance.

A Midnight Adventure in Louisiana.
[Iberia (La.) Sugar Bowl.]

At Pattersonville, some weeks since, while Captain N. Keyes was in bed, suffering from the effects of a violent sprain, his wife reached behind a trunk in the room to get a cloth for a bandage, when she was bitten by something which she declared she believed to be a snake. Sick as he was this brought Captain Keyes to his feet, and, sure enough, by the light of the lamp he discovered an immense moccasin coiled up behind the trunk. With light in hand he picked up something and endeavored to kill the reptile. His exertions overcame him. When Captain Keyes fell to the floor the lamp went out, and the snake was thus left alive in the midst of his terror-stricken family, who had been called to the rescue by the shrieks of the wife and mother. She felt the poison penetrating her arm, and said she knew it would soon kill her. Fearing the physician could not arrive in time to save her, Captain Keyes begged his wife to hold the fingers tightly to prevent the poison entering her system, and run as fast as she could to the residence of Dr. Roach. Although it was in the middle of the night, she started off alone, as no one else was at the moment dressed to accompany her. After she had gone, Captain Keyes heard her shrieking on the street, and fearing that she had perhaps been overcome by the poison and fallen down in the road, he started after her, sick as he was. He had not gone far, however, until his strength was exhausted, and he fell down in the street, but was soon picked up and carried to his residence by Mr. Victor Haydel. Upon reaching the residence of Captain Keyes a light was procured, the snake was killed, and, in the meantime, Mrs. Keyes had reached the physician, who immediately administered antidotes. The unfortunate lady's arm was terribly swollen, and she came very near dying. For a long time the arm was paralyzed, but we are glad to hear that she is rapidly recovering its use, under the treatment of Dr. T. T. Tarlton, who undertook the case when Dr. Roach left the place.

The School Marm.

Ladies travelling through Canada by rail are often greatly annoyed by having their luggage unnecessarily searched, but one of the officials recently got his deserts. It happened that a Yankee school teacher, on her way from Kansas to Vermont, passed through the Dominion, with a trunk packed to bursting with nothing contraband. When the officer demanded her key she begged him not to open it, assuring him that it had come through from Kansas, containing simply clothes and books, and was so full that it would be very troublesome to repack it. But he sternly demanded the key, and maliciously pulled everything out to the very bottom; then—finding her assertion true—he returned the key and advised her to "hurry up and get the straps back," as the train would soon move. "What is that to me?" said the quick-witted woman;" I have a check for that trunk, and hold the Grand Trunk Railway responsible for its safe delivery. I will not take the key, and you may do as you please with the trunk." Report says that official was very weary and red in the face and rather profane ere he finished packing that trunk.

How Like!

The Courier-Journal man sat down, to say that it was warm for the season; and this is the way that he began: October has caught the tip end of Lady August's panier as she was leaving her Summer house, and, like an impatient lover, insists upon promenading with her a while in the pleasant sunshine.

The Elections.

On Tuesday, elections were held in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Iowa and Oregon. The republican State ticket is chosen in Pennsylvania by nearly 50,000 majority. Philadelphia gave 25,000 majority. The temperance men were badly defeated.

In Iowa, the republican majority will be from 30,000 to 40,000. A heavy vote was polled.

Ohio has re-elected Governor Noyes, republican, by 10,000 majority. The legislature, which will choose a U. S. Senator in place of Thurman, democrat, is in doubt.

Oregon elects a democratic representative to Congress by 1000 majority, in place of Wilson, republican, deceased.

Readables.

Miss Mink, charged with the murder of Baker, at Rockland, Me., has been acquitted.

Boothby, who shot his wife dead at Malden, Mass., goes to State prison for life.

Chas. H. Phelps, cashier in the Treasury department of New York State, has been arrested charged with embezzling $300,000.

In Maryland the Democrats have divided into two bitter factions, and the republicans see a glimmer of hope that they may have a majority in the legislature and elect Mr. Creswell to the United States Senate.

Mr. R. M. T. Hunter of Virginia is now urging his little plea that the United States shall pay $400,000,000 as partial compensation to the Southern people for the loss of their slaves. This will be one of the jobs with money in it, which will come before Congress, but it is twelve years too late for such a proposition.

There is a huckleberry swamp in Cumro Township, Pa., which we should consider about the most unpleasant place to berry or be buried in, that could be found. Three ladies were there gathering huckleberries lately, when sticks, stones and all manner of missiles began to fly at them from the bushes, though no one was there. A large party of people investigated the spot, when the same belligerant exhibition was made, but nobody could be found. That huckleberry swamp is undoubtedly haunted by sundry ghosts, who are fond of that fruit and wish to have one little patch all to themselves. Better let them keep it. They may get sick on huckleberries and then there will be fun.

The prize declaimers of Oak Grove Seminary, Vassalborough, Maine, have issued a challenge to any institution consisting of both male and female pupils in the State of Maine to a contest in declamation—each side to furnish eight declaimers, all of them present pupils (if preferred), or four may be passed if under twenty-five years of age, but half of the entire number must be ladies.

An Early county (Ga.) court has decreed the enforcement of a verbal agreement between brother and sister, before their father's death, to share the property equally, regardless of any division made by his will. The case has been appealed.

A new saloon car for freight trains, just finished at the Maine Central shops in Augusta, has a turret from which the conductor can see the whole of his train at once, and communicate with the engineer and train hands. The brakes can be applied from the turret.

A Wilmington man has an acre of peat meadow which his predecessor ten or twelve years ago set out with cranberry vines. Two years ago he sold the crop of berries for $1,000. Last year the crop realized him $1,200 and this year $1,500. The land on which they were grown without the cranberry vines, is worth about $20 an acre; with the vines it has a productive value of $20,000.

State News.

Chief Justice Sargent has granted the petition of John H. Pearson for a temporary injunction restraining the directors of the Concord Railroad from depositing the earnings of the corporation with others than the treasurer.

Noah W. Spiller was killed in a car-shop at Laconia on the 15th by being caught in a shaft.

Jack Ashore.

We supposed the "true Brittsh sailor," of the type depicted by Capt. Marryatt and other English writers, was extinct long ago, even if he really existed; and that frying gold watches after every cruise and marrying a fresh wife in every port, with other harmless eccentricities, were no part of the modern sailor's recognized duties. But the following account of the manner in which the advent of pay-day was celebrated by a party of the "matelots" of Her Brittanic Majesty's ship Clio, which we take from the Hobart Town (Tasmania) Mercury, shows that the British sea-lion still flourishes and that Marryatt's description of him was by no means a caricature:

"A dozen men had hired an omnibus, which had been decorated in a decidedly novel fashion. A piece of quartering had been nailed on the root lengthways, and 'astern' the projection served as a sort of davit, to which a wheelbarrow had been slung. On the piece of quartering that projected over the front of the 'bus, a large doll had been fixed as a figure-head, and there was a barrel of beer on the box. There were various other decorations, including some sheets of painted canvas, bearing mottoes, and three or four large flags. The costumes of some of the occupants of the vehicle were most extraordinary. One had his trousers ornamented with rope ends, which hung like scalp locks from the legging of a red Indian; another was dressed in parti-colored trousers of blue and white, two were dressed in women's costume, with flowers in their hair; while others wore battered white hats of the belltopper order. A cab that was driven behind the 'bus also contained some strangely dressed individuals. As the vehicles were driven through the town, one of the men in the omnibus took soundings with a bunch of carrots tied to a long string, and the same operation was carried on in the cab behind, a sheep's head serving for the lead in this instance. The sailors all seemed bent on fun, and they drove through the streets singing merrily. Whenever the omnibus and the cab stopped, and it was time to start again, the order "all aboard" was shouted out, and the driver was commanded to "shove off" without delay. Coming up Elizabeth street, at half past three o'clock in the afternoon, a marine fell from the box of the 'bus. The cry of a 'man overboard' was raised, the vehicle was 'brought to,' the wheelbarrow lowered, and the marine placed in it and restored to his former seat on the box. Subsequently, several members of the police force were severely handled by the sailors in an attempt to apprehend several of the men by order of the commodore."

Thanksgiving Day.

By the President of the United States of America:

A PROCLAMATION.

The approaching close of another year brings with it the occasion for renewed thanksgiving and acknowledgment to the Almighty Ruler of the Universe for the unnumbered mercies which he has bestowed upon the United States. Abundant harvests have been among the rewards of industry. With local exceptions, health has been among the blessings enjoyed. Tranquility at home and peace with other nations have prevailed. Frugal industry is regaining its merited recognition and its merited rewards. Gradually but, under the providence of God, surely, as we trust, the nation is recovering from the lingering results of a dreadful civil strife. For these and all the other mercies vouchsafed it becomes us as a people to return heartfelt and grateful acknowledgment, and with our thanksgiving we may unite in prayer for the cessation of local and temporary suffering. I therefore recommend that on Thursday, the 27th day of November next, the people meet in their respective places of worship to make their acknowledgments to Almighty God for his bounties and his protection, and to offer to him prayers for their continuance.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. Done at the city of Washington, this the fourteenth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, and of the independence of the United States the ninety-seventh.

By the President.

(Signed) U. S. GRANT.

HAMILTON FISH,
Secretary of State.

—A Columbia (Pa.) clergyman, while preaching his sermon one Sunday evening, perceived a young man and woman under the gallery in the act of kissing each other behind a hymn-book, but did not lose his temper. He did not fly into an unseemly rage, and call upon the sexton to rush up the aisle and disband the rioters. No! He remained calm. He beamed mildly at the offenders over his spectacles, and when the young man kissed her the fifteenth time, he merely broke his sermon short off in the middle of "thirdly," and offered a fervent prayer in behalf of "the young man in the pink necktie, and the maiden in the blue bonnet and gray shawl, who were profaning the sanctuary by kissing one another in Few No. 68." And the congregation said, "Amen!" Then the young woman suddenly pulled her veil down, and the young man sat there and swore softly to himself. He does not go to church as much as he did.

—"How are you, my old friend?" pleasantly remarked a lone, lorn and drunken individual, as he approached the water of the river at New London. The by-standers thought he was addressing a man in the boat, but he wasn't—it was the water he addressed, and he speedily threw himself into the embrace of the friend of his childhood, long estranged. The inconsiderate ruffians pulled him out.

—An unsanctified Des Moines boy at a camp meeting took a preacher's horse to water, and while absent won $5 from another unsanctified urchin in a horse race.

Nast in the Lyceum.

Mr. Thomas Nast, the famous artist and caricaturist, has now fairly entered the lyceum lecture field, having appeared in three or four cities. He was in Bangor on Monday evening, and the local papers give an idea of the entertainment he offers. A very large audience applauded his appearance, and being introduced, says the Whig, "the fearless assailant of the Tammany ring, the intrepid champion of right against wrong, the man whom no intimidation could move, no threats scare, actually blushed as he came forward to the stand. And thereupon the audience applauded again." The same paper in sketching the lecture says that Mr. Nast premised that no creature but man laughs or is able to enjoy a joke, and the best nations and people of the world are those who laugh best. Wit and humor are most powerful weapons in the discussion of nearly all topics, and many a deep-laid scheme and project have been fairly drowned out of existence by the laughter of the public, excited by some stroke of pen or pencil. Caricaturing dates so far back that its origin is lost amid the mists of the deluge, and its early history is of course little known, but we have many instances and relics which show that it was employed by the ancients with great effect. The lecturer traced its progress in later times, and modestly related, to the delight of his auditors, how he accepted it as a profession—accepted, because his early ambition for high historical art was severely snubbed, and he was forced into a new field of art. In his younger days he delighted in depicting the humorous phases of what he saw, and this inclination had never deserted him. His first political caricature was on the "contraband," soon after General Butler declared the negroes to be "contraband of war," and its success led him to work in this direction. He told of his war with Tammany; how he was alternately threatened and coaxed; how the ring attempted to bribe him, and how they failed—narrating these matters in a quaint style that was irresistible. The American people, he said, were fun-loving and quick to catch a "point" made on any humbug, always ready to laugh down imposition and pretence, when shown up by the wit of the journalist or the ridicule of the caricaturist.

The lecture was illustrated by frequent sketches in colored crayons on a large screen, rapidly drawn and very effective. Andy Johnson was depicted in ermine, crown and royal robes, as an example of "Cæsarism," and facing him the artist drew the ghost of Cæsarism in the form of a donkey's head, laurel-crowned and bodiless — because, as Mr. Nast observed, Cæsar is no—body. Burton, the comedian, whom Nast used to sketch when a boy, was shown as "Toodles," and the power to change the expression of a face with a few lines was admirably instanced. Then to illustrate another point, a colossal sketch of Butler's head was formed on the canvas in a very brief time. Next Tweed was sketched. Finally, a comical sketch of the lecturer himself, arrayed in night-shirt and cap, candle in hand, appeared on the screen, and intimated that the lecture was finished.

—A San Francisco congregation, grown weary of western ways, lately decided to call a minister from "the East." Accordingly they sent to Minnesota for candidates!

Vegetine is perfectly harmless from any bad effect on the system.

SOMETHING CERTAIN AT LAST.—PILES is not only one of the most painful of human diseases, but professional men had almost despaired of finding a remedy, until the introduction of ANAKESIS by DR. SELDEN, and after an experience of 20,000 cases in five years, doctors agree that an infallible remedy has been found. Sufferers will appreciate ANAKESIS after trying everything else in vain and then experiencing the bliss of instant relief and ultimate cure. Price $1.00. Sent free by mail on receipt of price. Depot, 46 Walker st., New York.

To break up Colds, Fevers, Inflammatory and Bilious Attacks, take a full cathartic dose of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets when the attack first comes on, and follow with two or three Pellets each day until a perfect cure is effected. They cure these cases by arousing all the secretions, relieving obstructions, thus reducing the action of the heart, relieving the congested blood-vessels, softening the pulse, producing gentle perspiration, and subduing the heat and fever. Twenty five cents a vial, by all Druggists.

Troops of Ailments Vanquished.

On account of the promptness with which it checks the fevers generated by unhealthy exhalations, Hostetter's Bitters is considered an indispensable family medicine on the borders of our Southern and Western rivers, and in new settlements where the plough and the axe are for the first time disturbing the solitudes of nature. Its reputation, however, is not confined to such localities. Wherever the elements of disease are rife it is the surest safeguard of health; wherever sickness prevails, it is efficacious as a remedy. Among the serious diseases which it is guaranteed to control are indigestion, biliousness, and all the minor ailments connected with derangements of the stomach, the liver, and the Bowels—such as heartburn, headache, flatulence, costiveness, nausea, distaste for food, languor and debility, palpitation of the heart, trembling of the hands, noises in the ears, disordered vision, disturbed sleep, and mental inquietude. As these physical and mental disturbances tend to a general failure of all the powers of the system, they should be at once corrected, as they always may be, by a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL,

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption.

The few compositions which have won the confidence of mankind, and become household words among not only one but many nations, must have extraordinary virtues. Perhaps no one ever secured a wide a reputation, or maintained it so long, as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It has been known to the public about forty years, by a long-continued series of marvellous cures, that have won for it a confidence in its virtues never equalled by any other medicine. It still makes the most effectual cures of COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION, that can be made by medical skill. Indeed, the CHERRY PECTORAL has really robbed these dangerous diseases of their terrors, to a great extent, and given a feeling of immunity from their fatal effects, that is well-founded, if taken in season. Every family should have it in their closet for the ready and prompt relief of its members. Sickness, suffering, and even life is saved by this timely protection. The prudent should not neglect it, and the wise will not. Keep it by you for the protection it affords by its timely use in sudden attacks.

Local Matters.

Not Much of a Pig.

A young couple in Kittery recently ratified an engagement to form a copartnership for better or worse, the ceremony taking place in church in the evening. As is the custom, the sexton of the church had reserved several of the seats nearest the pulpit for the relatives and immediate friends of the young couple; but just before the arrival a gentleman of the fish-dealing persuasion, attired in his every-day robes and redolent of his occupation, escorted two marines up the aisle and into one of the reserved pews, seating himself at the head. The sexton, supposing a mistake had been made, quietly asked the fishy gentleman if he would vacate the seat, (there being plenty of other pews unoccupied) for the use of the parties most interested in the ceremony which was about to come off, and received the courteous answer, loud enough to be heard by all in the vicinity, "Not by a —— sight! This is my pew and I don't give it up for anybody." The ill-mannered boor has long treasured a grievance, real or imaginary, against a relative of the bridegroom, which is supposed to have prompted this contemptible essay at the annoyance of unoffending parties.

To-Morrow Evening.

Amusement seekers will enjoy a lively entertainment known as "Washburn's Last Sensation." The Washburns have been here before, and if they give as good a performance as they did during their last appearance, (which we do not doubt,) they will deserve a large attendance. The Providence Journal says they had a $1200 to $1500 show on a rainy night, there, three weeks ago. The entertainment, or rather series of entertainments, lasted for three hours and a half, and from the raising to the falling of the curtain a perfect shower of stars were continually appearing and kept the vast audience in a continual roar of laughter. Thirty seven persons are connected with the company. Our advice to citizens generally is to go and see the fun.

A Brilliant White-Wash.

This is the brilliant stucco white-wash on the east of the President's house in Washington: Take 1-2 bushel of nice unslacked lime, slack it with boiling water, covering it during the process to keep in the steam. Strain the liquid through a fine sieve or strainer, and add to it a peck of clean salt, previously well dissolved in warm water, 3 lbs. of ground rice boiled to a thin paste and stirred in boiling hot, 1-2 lb. of powerful Spanish whiting and 1 lb. of clean glue, which has been previously dissolved by first soaking it well, and then hanging it over a slow fire in a small kettle within another kettle of water. Add 5 gallons of water to the whole mixture, stir it well and let it stand a few days covered from dirt. It should be put on quite hot, it can be kept in a kettle on a portable furnace. It is said that 1 pint of this mixture will cover a square yard upon the outside of a house, if properly applied. Brushes can be used according to the neatness of the job required. It answers as well as oil paint for brick, wood or stone, and is cheaper. It retains its brilliancy for many years. There is nothing of the kind that will compare with it, either for inside or outside walls. Coloring may be used, Spanish brown will make a red or pink according to the quantity used; a delicate tinge of this is very pretty for inside walls. Finely pulverized common clay well mixed with Spanish brown before it is stirred into the mixture makes a lilac color, very suitable for the outside of the buildings. Lamp-black and Spanish brown mixed together make a reddish stone color; yellow ochre stirred in makes a yellow wash, but chrome goes further and makes a prettier color. In all these cases, of course, the darkness of the shade will be determined by the quantity of coloring matter used.

Experiments can be made on a board and left to dry. Green must not be used with lime; the lime destroys the color and the color has no effect upon the white wash, which makes it crack and peel. When walls have been badly smoked and are to be made clear white, it is well to squeeze indigo plentifully through a bag into the water used, before it is stirred into the whole mixture. If a larger quantity than 5 gallons is wanted, the same proportions should be observed.

Laconics.

On Monday afternoon, as the wife of Edward C. Moody, Esq., and two misses, daughters of Isaiah P. Moody, Esq., were riding near the town house, in York, their spirited horse became frightened, upsetting the carriage, and throwing the ladies out, quite severely injuring Miss Sarah Moody. Mrs. Moody also received some injuries. The carriage, a very nice top buggy, was badly damaged. Miss Moody was attended by Dr. Hazen, who dressed her wounds and had her conveyed to her home.

—Young lady, to a beau of whose company she is getting tired: "I hope you are not nervous, because that clock has a queer effect on people. All my gentlemen acquaintances start when it strikes ten, and it's just going to strike; so if you are nervous perhaps you had better go home before it begins." He went.

Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Company.

COAL.

HAVING contracted for a quantity of the above coal, we would call the attention of Manufacturers, Dealers and Consumers to the following different grades mined and controlled by the Company:

HARD WHITE ASH COAL,
FREE BURNING WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN RED ASH COAL,
NORTH FRANKLIN COAL,
LYKENS VALLEY COAL.

In order that all coal shall be shipped in good order, a most rigid system of inspection, both at the mines and at the shipping ports, will at all times be enforced. In every district of the coal region there will be appointed a number of competent persons skilled in the preparation of coal, as local inspectors, whose duty it will be to visit the several collieries daily to see that a proper force is at all times employed in removing slate, and to prevent, if possible, any coal being sent from the mines in bad order. In addition to these efforts at prevention, no means will be left untried at the shipping ports to cure the evils of careless preparation. At Schuylkill Haven, Port Clinton and Port Richmond, ALL COAL WILL BE SUBJECTED TO THE PERSONAL EXAMINATION OF A SKILLED INSPECTOR BEFORE IT IS SHIPPED, and if condemned by him, will be dumped in places provided for the purpose, and before being loaded into vessels WILL BE THOROUGHLY RE-PICKED AND CLEANED BY HAND.

We keep a fine stock of the above coal on hand, also

A Red Preacher on the War-Path.

[Sioux City Journal.]

Major Bingham, of Cheyenne, has got himself in trouble with an Indian preacher. This red reverend father started a report among the Indians at the Agency to the effect that Major Bingham, the Agent, had a case of revolvers which the Great Father had sent to them. When the Indians were called up to receive their annuities the other day, they demanded their revolvers, and acted very hostile because they were not forthcoming. They would not believe their Agent for some time. But he was equal to the emergency. He requested to know who told them that the Great Father had sent them fire-arms. This preacher was pointed out as their authority, when the Major went straight to the reverend liar and kicked him out of the room. The Indian offered no resistance, but went to his wigwam, took off his ministerial suit and donned the breechclout, and declared war against the Agent. He swore he would kill Major Bingham upon the first opportunity, and he danced all night and sang war-songs. It is feared that the Indian will carry his threats into execution, and extra precautions have been adopted by the Agent.

—The Hartford mason who let a brick tumble from the fourth story upon the shoulder of a man who was passing was feelingly admonished; "You dropped a brick." "Na matter," said the bricklayer, "you needn't trouble yourself to bring it up."

WILLIAM CHURCHILL,

Agent for Portsmouth and vicinity.

The Singer Still Triumphant!

At the Vienna Exhibition, the SINGER received the Medal of Merit, the Medal of Progress, and three other Medals for superiority of production. These are the highest Sewing Machine Awards at Vienna. The SINGER received all the medals awarded to either of the competing machines, and two medals more than any other exhibitor. Then, in the name of Truth, what is it that prompts people to claim recommendations for the Diploma of Honor? The fact is, no Diploma of Honor has been given to any Sewing Machine Company.

But immeasurably more valuable is The World's Award as shown by sales—proved by sworn returns to the owners of the principal Sewing Machine Companies—which last year amounted to TWO HUNDRED AND NINETEEN THOUSAND, SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHT (219,758) machines, nine out of ten of them being for Family Use. This is over 45,000 more Sewing Machines than were sold by any other company during the same period, and over One Quarter of all the machines sold in 1872. These enormous sales are owing to the long-tested merits of the SINGER Machines, which meet the wants of the public in superiority and simplicity of construction, and capability for great variety and excellence of work. That the users of Sewing Machines find these desirable qualities in the Singer beyond all others, is shown by the sales above given, aside from the awards of International Juries, either at home or abroad.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, DROPSY AND HUMORS.

PERUVIAN SYRUP

Makes The Weak Strong.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an ailment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building upon an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

AMERICAN & FOREIGN PATENTS.

R. H. EDDY,

SOLICITOR OF PATENTS,

For Inventions, Trade Marks or Designs.

No. 76 STATE ST., OPPOSITE KILBY ST., BOSTON.

After an extensive practice of upwards of thirty years, continues to secure patents in the United States; also in Great Britain, France and other foreign countries. Caveats, Specifications, Assignments, and all papers for Patents, executed on reasonable terms with dispatch. Researches made to determine the validity and utility of Patents of Inventions, and legal and other advice rendered in all matters touching the same. Copies of the claims of any patent furnished, by remitting one dollar. Assignments recorded in Washington.

No Agency in the United States possesses superior facilities for obtaining Patents or ascertaining the patentability of inventions.

All necessity for a journey to Washington to procure a Patent and the usual great delay there, are here saved inventors.

TESTIMONIALS.

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse. CHARLES MASON, Commissioner of Patents."

"I have no hesitation in assuring inventors that they cannot employ a man more competent and trustworthy and more capable of putting their applications in a form to secure for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent-Office.
EDMUND BURKE,
Late Commissioner of Patents."

"MR. R. H. EDDY has made for me over THIRTY applications for Patents, having been successful in almost every case. Such unmistakable proof of great talent and ability on his part leads me to recommend ALL inventors to apply to him to procure their Patents, as they may be sure of having the most faithful attention bestowed on their cases and at very reasonable charges. JOHN TAGGART."

THE GREAT REMEDY FOR CONSUMPTION!

And acknowledged by many prominent physicians to be the most Reliable Preparation ever introduced for the RELIEF and CURE of all

LUNG COMPLAINTS.

This well known remedy is offered to the public, sanctioned by the experience of over forty years, and when resorted to in season seldom fails to effect a speedy cure of

CONSUMPTION

CURED

By a timely resort to this standard remedy, as is proved by hundreds of testimonials received by the proprietors.

Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry

CLERGYMEN, LAWYERS, SINGERS,

And all those whose occupation requires an unusual exercise of the vocal organs, will find this the ONLY PREPARATION which will effectually and instantaneously relieve their difficulty.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS.—Remember that the genuine Wistar's Balsam has on the outside wrapper the signature of "I. BUTTS," and the printed name of the proprietors, "SETH W. FOWLE & SONS, BOSTON." All others are base imitations. Examine the wrapper carefully before purchasing.

The Horse.

[Boston Globe.]

SIR: In 1860 the writer of this first saw the article which is reprinted below, professedly from the pen of Dickens. I should judge from the way he writes here, and from reading his works generally, and especially from the fact that he was such a great walker—that Dickens was neither fond of horses nor much accustomed to them—for great pedestrians are not usually good horsemen, and vice versa. But if Dickens was not much on a horse literally, his opinion of the equine species generally contain, I think, far more of truth than poetry—though doubtless many a reader, who either entertains a platonic love for some pet horse, or a chivalric regard for the equine species in general, will at first dissent from the conclusions of the great novelist and shrewd observer.

Now, I am no hater of horses, but have used them and valued them all my life; have myself owned more than fifty good ones, and have no less than five, which I prize highly, in my stable at this time. But the point I wish to make, and in which I am glad to be able to summon so competent a witness as Dickens, is, that the ability, and especially the inability, of the horse is greatly overrated, and chiefly by those who really know but comparatively little about the treacherous and uncertain animal from their own experience. But let me first give you Dickens' article referred to, which many will regard as a tirade against their favorite quadruped; and then I will explain where I first found it, and, with your permission, will add some correlative argument of my own. Here is the article:

CHARLES DICKENS ON HORSES.—I object to the personal appearance of the horse. I protest against the conventional idea of beauty, as attached to that animal. I think his nose too long, his forehead too low, and his legs (except in the case of the cart horse) ridiculously thin for his body. Again, considering how big an animal he is, I object to the contemptible delicacy of his constitution. Is he not the sickliest creature in creation? Does a child catch cold as easily as a horse? Does not a horse, for all his appearance of superior strength, strain his fetlock as easily as I sprain my ankle? Furthermore, to take him from another point of view, what a helpless wretch he is! No fine lady requires more constant waiting on than a horse.

Other animals can make their own toilet; he must have a groom. You will tell that this is because we want to make his coat artificially glossy, Glossy! Come home with me, and see my cat—my clever cat, who can groom herself! Look at your own dog! See how the intelligent creature curry-combs himself with his own honest teeth! Then, again, what a fool the horse is—what a poor nervous fool! He will start at a white stone, or a piece of paper in the road, as if it were a lion. His one idea, when he hears a noise he is not accustomed to, is to run away from it. What do you say to these two common instances of the sense and courage of this absurdly over-praised animal? I might multiply them to 200, if I chose to exercise my mind and waste my breath, which I can never do.

I prefer coming at once to my last charge against the horse, which is the most serious of all, because it affects his moral character. I accuse him boldly, in his capacity of servant to man, of slyness and treachery. I brand him publicly, no matter how mild he may look about the eyes, or how sleek he may be in the coat, as a systematic betrayer, whenever he can get the chance, of the confidence reposed in him."

This article was floating about in the papers in 1860, and was copied into the Portsmouth CHRONICLE, where I read and appreciated it. Many a time since have I tried to find it, here and elsewhere; have inquired of and written to numerous parties, and have asked for it through at least three different newspapers, including the Globe and Transcript, and spent not a little time in searching the files of the CHRONICLE, but all in vain.

Happening to mention the matter to the Hon. H. H. Coolidge of Boston, one day, I found he had seen the article somewhere and was desirous of finding it again, but had also sought unsuccessfully. He thought the words were put into the mouth of one of Dickens' characters, but could not tell which nor where. It was during Mr. Coolidge's first term as President of the Senate, and, as he is not so much in love with horses as Governor Claflin is known to be, I suspect he wanted Dickens to help him fortify his position against fast horses. Be this as it may, Mr. Coolidge is the only man, except James T. Fields, and one other friend who read it in the CHRONICLE here, whom I have ever met in all my inquiries who had seen or heard of this argument of Dickens vs. horses.

Meeting Mr. Fields here on the 4th of July, I asked him about it, and was astonished to be told that he had been hunting for the article for years! He said it was not in any of Dickens' published works, but was only a fugitive piece from his pen, but he did not doubt it was authentic. On learning this I was almost discouraged, for if Fields could not inform me about Dickens, who could? Finally, I grew desperate, and procuring the bound files of the CHRONICLE and enlisting the services of several friends we hunted till we found it—and now you have it, and Mr. A. and Mr. E., and all the rest of mankind can get copies through the great Globe itself.

And I declare it a true indictment, in every count only the half is not told. The horse is useful, valuable, almost indispensable, but there you must stop; he is not noble nor chivalrous. He is timid, treacherous, dirty and delicate. The cow is scarcely more foolish, the pig not more stubborn, the cat scarcely less reliable.

The most intelligent horse I ever owned, which can be driven anywhere without reins, is a confirmed halter puller. I have seen a young and gentle mare, when being led by her own favorite groom, kick half his teeth down his throat; and all hostlers know that a very common trick in horses is to kick at the man who has just fed them. I recollect when a boy and living near Governor Harris' residence in this city, that one horse in his stable kicked another beautiful animal that was passing his stall, and broke her leg, and I have owed the species a grudge ever since. But I cannot enumerate, and must hold my pen, if not my horses. My point is that horses shall not be over-estimated, that is all. I know it will be urged that they are intelligent and ingenious; so they are, usually for mischief or for their own ends. And loving and affectionate—but I can't exactly allow this, since they do not always appreciate kind treatment, from one another or their grooms or owners.

But this heat is getting too long, and I may get blown. With a single allusion to Mr. Murray's new book, I close. In your notice of it the other day, I believe he was quoted as saying, that a horse with a flat forehead will be a surly, ugly beast. Now that is exactly the opposite to my belief and experience. Nearly all the "contrary," baulky, vicious beasts I have ever seen, had full round foreheads; and an experienced and sagacious horseman at my elbow exactly agrees with me. Every horse in my stable, to-day (including a Black Hawk trotter, and the first colt of old Fearnaught, and also the first colt of Fearnaught, second,) has a flat forehead; and if there are any kinder animals anywhere, I have never seen them. Either I have altogether misapprehended Mr. Murray, or he misapprehended this feature of his subject. Yours,

HORSE MARINE.

Editorial Thieves.

[Peoria (Ill.) Review.]

The cheekiest thief that we can think of at this moment is the local editor of the Kansas City Times. So long ago as August 23d, the local of the Review ground out a villainous series of rhymes about one "Pete, a Tie-Up Baggageman, he run on Number Four." The Inter-Ocean, Post, and other of the great dailies of Chicago condescending enough to assist "struggling genius," were kind enough to reprint the stuff and give us credit. But this Kansas City Times man issues it, last Friday, as his own. The thing isn't worth noticing, save as a text for a sermon often preached by editors who keep sufficient italic letters in their office to set up the names of those papers from the columns of which they occasionally scissor; unfortunately, some offices are entirely destitute of italics.

The Kansas City Times man will please stand up.

Do you know, you shallow-pated thief, that you have committed the meanest crime known to the profession? Don't you know that an editor's thoughts, even if they are poor, and his ideas, though they be absurd, and his articles, even it trashy, are his property, and you have no more right to steal them than you had to steal the scissors (as doubtless you did) that you clip them with? And don't you know, you fool, that in these days of "much newspaper" such a theft is no sooner committed than it is known to all our exchanges and half your readers? Why, the Review has a better circulation in Kansas to-day than your own paper has, and when your readers see that you are compelled to make up your paper from ours they will naturally want their goods from first hands.

And if you have mistaken your vocation, if your brains are in your paste-pot and your ideas are your scissors—if, in other words, you can steal so much better than you can write—either enlarge your paste-pot to a bucket, trade your scissors for a brush, and go to bill-posting, or else earn a livelihood by picking pockets. You'll make more at it, and won't run so great a risk of detection.

Or you can do this: We won't exchange with such a sheet as you are able to get out but we will send you the Review for the small sum of five dollars a year, invariably in advance. You will, by subscribing, pay us something for what you steal. Or, if you will pay us by the article, we will write "Legends of the Kansas Pacific" for you that will rattle the teeth out of your head.

—"What's in a name?" A good deal at times. The daughter of Don Carlos, the pretender to the throne of Spain, for instance, has plenty in hers, which, according to a contemporary, is, in French: Blanche-de-Castile-Marie-de-la-Conception-Therese-Francoise-d'-Assise-Marguerite-Jetanne-Beatrice-Charlotte-Louise-Fernande-Adelgonde-Elvire-Ildefonse-Regine-Josephe-Michelle-Gabrielle-Raphaelle. These constitute the young lady's Christian name only, and when her titles are added there are probably a dozen lines or so more. It is to be hoped that the Don is not going to have a large family, for two or three children christened in this fashion would exhaust the vocabulary.

Fred Grant will marry Kitty Cooke—don't you know?

A Detroit editor sees nothing more nor less than a great hero in Captain Jack, who stretched hemp at Fort Klamath on Friday last. What had Jack and his comrades done? Only this, and nothing more, according to our Michigan brother: "They struck the foe whose heels were on their necks, and retiring into the barren lava beds made the last fight for their race, Leonidas in the pass of Thermopylæ was not more a hero than Capt. Jack in the lava beds."

A Catastrophe.

An old lady who lives a little distance from the small village of Queshy, Vt., writes a friend, went to the store in that place a few days ago for a pot of paint, with which she designed ornamenting her kitchen floor. She told the clerk, who went down stairs to prepare the decoction, to put in plenty of drying material, and he honestly intended to do so, but missing some pomatum from one side of his moustache, the loss so annoyed him that he omitted paying that attention to the order which it required, and instead of turpentine, poured in a generous quantity of syrup. That evening the old lady painted her floor, and the next morning made an examination of it, to test its condition. When she opened the door, her cat, which was following, playfully jumped into the room, and then stopped. The old lady immediately shewed the animal, but it didn't shew. It pulled away and tore one foot from the floor, and sat it down again to pull up another, which necessitated pulling up the first one again. Then it tried the experiment over again, but with the same result. Finally it lifted one foot, and kept it up until the other was lifted. This gave the animal the appearance of trying to stand on its head, but its plaintive cries indicated that such was not its purpose. While thus raised it attempted to lift the third foot, but in so doing fell over, and came down on its side in the paint, and there it stuck, clawing the air with its paws, and spitting forth the most venomous sounds. The old lady got a board, and laying it to the cat, succeed with some difficulty in rescuing it. But she could not understand why the paint should be so moist. In the afternoon she tested the floor again with her finger, but the paint was still sticky. The next morning it was the same, and also in the afternoon. The third morning there was no improvement, nor any in the afternoon. She was astonished. When she touched her finger to the paint this time, she transferred the finger to her tongue then opened her eyes a little wider, and tasted again. After that she put on her things, harnessed her horse, and started for that store. And that evening the clerk shaved off his moustache, and buried his pomatum in the solitude of the fores.

—If you are a bashful man here's a bit of advice for you that will save you much mental disturbance and spare your blushes. Always put your gloves on before getting into a horse car. Otherwise, one glove on, you will look up from your work and find every man, woman and child on the opposite seat staring dead at you with looks that portray the most lively interest in your proceedings. If you should attempt to stand upon your head and perform a solo upon a comb, you would attract no more attention than you will by putting on a glove.

President Grant on Specie Payments.

The following is the full letter of President Grant, on specie payments, to Mr. Cowdrey, president of the Continental Bank of New York:

My Dear Mr. Cowdrey; Your letter of the 29th ultimo was duly received and read, as was your previous letter. Neither required an answer particularly, and hence I did not answer them at that time. Your last letter, however, contains one sentence that it seems proper I should reply to. That is as to an implied threat to the national banks contained in my letter to Messrs. Anthony and Claflin. Nothing was further from my mind than a threat. My whole object was to restore confidence to the public mind and to give assurances that the government would give all the aid in its power, keeping in view at the same time the solvency of the national Treasury. You and all bank presidents know more about the condition of your banks than I can possibly know. In turn, I, through the Secretary of the Treasury, know more about the financial condition of the government, its ability to render aid, &c., than any person disconnected from the administration of its affair can know. I alluded to the fact that the $44,000,000 reserve notes in the Treasury would be regarded as money in the Treasury, subject to use, for the purpose of showing that the means are at hand to give the relief we promise. I do not believe the present panic will work to individuals half the injury it will work general good to the country at large. Our momentary system is the creation of necessity. It has no elasticity, but in other respects it is the best that has ever been devised. No one now distrusts the value of his paper dollar; on the contrary, it is seized and hoarded with the same avidity now that the gold dollar has been in former like adversity. The panic will call attention to the defects in our momentary system, and will no doubt lead to legislation to relieve the want of elasticity. The panic has brought greenbacks about to a par with silver. I wonder that silver is not already coming into the market to supply the deficiency in the circulating medium. When it comes, and I predict that it will soon, we will have made a rapid stride towards specie payments. Currency will never go below silver after that. The circulation of silver will have other beneficial effects. Experience has proved that it takes about $40,000,000 of fractional currency to make the small change necessary for the transaction of the business of the country. Silver will gradually take the place of this currency, and further will be hoarded in a small way. I estimate that this will consume from two three hundred millions, in time, of this species of our circulating medium. It will leave the paper currency free to perform the legitimate functions of trade, and will tend to bring us back where we must come at last, to a specie basis. I confess to a desire to see a limited amount of hoarded money. It insures a firm foundation in time of need, but I want to see the hoarding of something that has a standard of value the world over. Silver has this, and if we once get back to that our strides toward a higher appreciation of our currency will be rapid. Our mines are now producing almost unlimited amounts of silver, and it is becoming a question, "What shall we do with it?" I suggest here a solution that will answer for some years, and suggest to you, bankers, whether you may not initiate it,—to put it in calculation now. Keep it there until it is fixed, and then we will find other markets. The South and Central American countries have asked us to coin their silver for them. There has never been authority of law to do so. I trust it will now be given. When it is given it will be more than the equivalent of becoming exporters of articles of manufacture, which were previously articles of import. Orders will come for large amounts of coin. It will be all in silver, while payments are not necessarily so. We become the manufacturer of this currency, with a profit, and will probably secure a portion of our pay in the more precious metal. I have thought much about the recommendations I should make to Congress, and have changed slightly in regard to banking laws since I last had the pleasure of a personal interview with you. It is not necessary to state what these changes are, because they may undergo further modification. I shall give to the subject, however, my sincerest thoughts, and will court the views of others. I have written this hastily, but if it calls forth any views you would like to express I will be glad to hear them. Yours truly,

U. S. GRANT.

A Plucky Conductor.

How some Western gamblers found their master in a Michigan conductor is thus told by the Detroit Free Press: "For the last month a trio of monte men have been 'working' the lines running into Detroit. They have been put off the Central, chased off the Detroit and Milwaukie, and kicked off the Lansing Road, but they made a fresh start the other morning on the Southern, going out on Conductor Wilsey's train. At the depot they got in with an old man named Fremont, who lives in Pittsburg, and was on his way home. They pretended to live in Pittsburg also, and soon after getting on board the train they brought out their cards. Fremont is one of those smart old chaps who always think themselves posted, and he knew the game, and decided to make some money out of them. He lost $5, then $10, and between Detroit and the Junction he lost $55. This was all the money he had, but his blood was up, and he hauled out a heavy gold watch to stake on the next bet when the conductor passed along. Seeing what was going on, Wilsey told the old man to put up his watch. At this, one of the gamblers snatched it saying, 'I have won this!' and then locked up at the conductor with a face full of brass. The train had been at a stand-still, and as it started the conductor pulled the signal to stop and turned to the gamblers and demanded that they give Fremont back his watch and money. They refused in chorus, and one of the gamblers, as the conductor's coat came off, shouted, 'This is better!' and pulled out a revolver and lined it on Wilsey's eye. 'Commence shooting!' replied the conductor, and out came his own pistol, and for twenty seconds two revolvers were held up into two men's faces, hammers up and fingers on the triggers. The two other gamblers began to feel for their hip pockets, when Wilsey quietly said, 'If you don't hold up your hands I'll blow the top of your head off!' At that moment a Cleveland merchant and a Toledo Lake captain came up, each with a cocked revolver. At this the gamblers offered to restore the watch, and when they had done so the conductor made them return the full $55. 'Now then,' said he, when he was through with them, 'get off this train! I shall remember you, and if I ever catch you, on my train again I'll have the engineer run her up to sixty miles an hour and my brakeman will pitch you into the first swamp!' The fellows were ready to go."

The Ocean.

[Atlantic Monthly.]

What do we know about things ten miles down in the stupendous valley of the ocean? On land, here, the vegetation of the Alpine base is not that of its summit; the wild goat skips upon the peaks or the Himalayas, but the rhinoceros has his lair miles below. Our acquaintance with the mysteries of the deep must be absolutely and literally superficial, for, we assume that its mountain tops alone are revealed to us, and these dimly, and that to its valleys our senses can never penetrate. All the creatures that disport themselves on or near the surface, are more or less familiar to us, the whales, the porpoises, and the shark, that come tumbling over its undulations much in the same way that buffaloes come floundering over the waves of the prairie. The vast broods that feed on its shallow banks, and are taken therefrom to feed shallower mortals, are all within our grasp, and we grasp them. On the ledge of the iceberg sits enthroned the walrus, and we salute him as the elephant of the sea, and esteem him unspeakably for the commercial value of his ivory tusks. The huge sea cow has no mystery for us. We take the harmless creature up from its bed of seaweed on the isolated rock, and having wished it a good morning, we stick spears into it, and convert it to the noble purpose of gain. The magnificent sea-unicorn, king of the Arctic waters, is no stranger to him. We have cognizance of all these sea creatures and many more, the range of which appears to be in the upper regions of the deep; but what can we aver of the mystic realms that lie far, far down about the bases of the great submarine mountain ranges—mountains compared with which our highest dry land peaks are possibly nothing but mere hillocks?

There is a sea monster known to fishermen as the Horned Ray, a monster most fearful in itself, but interesting as an illustration of that which is, and a suggestion of that which may be,—a veritable dragon of the sea, whose lateral fins extend like wings, and frequently measure more than thirty feet from tip to tip. This voracious fish will sometimes make its appearance among the swimmers in the surf, and taking one under each arm, so to speak, descend with them to depths unknown. Until ocean shall have been dried up, or drained off, no human being can ever explore the strange grottoes into which this hideous man-eater glides with his prey. The great fishes and sea-beasts that are known to us may be creatures of the upper deep alone, never descending below a certain depth, lest they encounter far more hideous and powerful monsters than themselves, which dwell at the bases of the marine mountains leagues farther down. One can easily imagine a polypus anchored there below in some distracting valley, of which it is the lord and tyrant,—a stupendous mass of bloated matter, grasping at everything within a circumference of half a mile and absorbent of all living creatures under the size of a whale. In the China Sea there are bivalves—whether oysters or muscles I am not certain—the shells of which are large enough to contain a man properly doubled up. If a monster like this inhabit comparative shallows there is no limit to one's imaginings of the bivalvular enormities at the bottom ten miles farther down.

Arrest of Mrs. Thurston.

Mrs. Jane Thurston, of Maine, whose eccentricities have made her widely known, has been arrested in Portland, and will probably be sent to the State Lunatic Asylum. For years she has entertained the idea that not only the state of Maine belonged to her, but that she was also the proprietor of the United States and Great Britain. Lately her insanity has assumed a new phase, and is thus described by the Portland Press: "She read of the panic and became alarmed for the safety of her greenbacks, held in trust by the banks. She thought it time to begin to draw some of them for her own private use. Consequently a few days since she drew her check for $1000 which she presented, attached to one of her printed manifestoes, to the Casco Bank. Of course she was told that there was no money belonging to her on deposit there. She, however, asserted her ownership to the entire bank, and, assuming a tragical air, ordered the president, cashier, and clerks to 'vamose the ranche.' She was quieted down and took her departure. Yesterday she stepped into the First National Bank and attempted the same episode. The cashier took a different view of the matter, and, on finding she was determined to continue her annoyance, turned her over to the police, and she was taken to the station. An application has been made by the proper officers to have her sent to the Insane Asylum. An order will probably be granted by the authorities to convey her to Augusta."

Business Notices.

To break up Colds, Fevers, Inflammatory and Bilious Attacks, take a full cathartic dose of Dr. Pierce's Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets when the attack first comes on, and follow with two or three Pellets each day until a perfect cure is effected. They cure these cases by arousing all the secretions, relieving obstructions, thus reducing the action of the heart, relieving the congested blood-vessels, softening the pulse, producing gentle perspiration, and subduing the heat and fever. Twenty five cents a vial, by all Druggists.

Troops of Ailments Vanquished.

On account of the promptness with which it checks the fevers generated by unhealthy exhalations, Hostetter's Bitters is considered an indispensable family medicine on the borders of our Southern and Western rivers, and in new settlements where the plough and the axe are for the first time disturbing the solitudes of nature. Its reputation, however, is not confined to such localities. Wherever the elements of disease are rife it is the surest safeguard of health; wherever sickness prevails, it is efficatious as a remedy. Among the serious diseases which it is guaranteed to control are indigestion, billiousness, and all the minor ailments connected with derangements of the stomach, the liver, and the Bowels—such as heartburn, headache, flatulence, costiveness, nausea, distaste for food, languor and debility, palpitation of the heart, trembling of the hands, noises in the ears, disordered vision, disturbed sleep, and mental inquietude. As these physical and mental disturbances tend to a general failure of all the powers of the system, they should be at once corrected, as they always may be, by a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL,

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption.

The few compositions which have won the confidence of mankind, and become household words among not only one but many nations, must have extraordinary virtues. Perhaps no one ever secured a wide a reputation, or maintained it so long, as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It has been known to the public about forty years, by a long-continued series of marvellous cures, that have won for it a confidence in its virtues never equalled by any other medicine. It still makes the most effectual cures of COUGHS, COLDS, CONSUMPTION, that can be made by medical skill. Indeed, the CHERRY PECTORAL has really robbed these dangerous diseases of their terrors, to a great extent, and given a feeling of immunity from their fatal effects, that is well-founded, if taken in season. Every family should have it in their closet for the ready and prompt relief of its members. Sickness, suffering, and even life is saved by this timely protection. The prudent should not neglect it, and the wise will not. Keep it by you for the protection it affords by its timely use in sudden attacks.

NOTICE

IS HEREBY GIVEN that I have given my son, CHARLES N. HURD, his time, and shall claim none of his earnings and pay none of his debts from this date. L. N. HURD.

Portsmouth, N. H., Oct. 6, 1873. o7W4t

Lechery.

We have recently heard frequent complaints of insults of one kind and another having been offered to ladies while walking unprotected in our streets early in the evening; in some cases the outrages referred to having taken place in broad daylight. A man employed as a shoemaker in the store of John Kelley on Market street has recently been arrested on suspicion of being the guilty party, but none of the ladies who were the subjects of his insults being willing to confront him he was discharged from custody with an order to leave the city. This he has not done, being advised by some one to remain. Now, as it is pretty confidently known that he is the man, we would also venture to advise him,—viz., that if he would enjoy the luxury of a whole skin and a feeling of general good health, to leave the town at once by all means. X.

Messrs. Editors: From reading the article in your paper of the 13th, giving an account of the disturbance on Market Street last Sunday evening, I find you give the public to understand that the attack upon me was on account of my temperance principles. Such was not the case; I was at my door when a drunken fellow came along, and as I was the first one he came across, he pitched into me. He would have been as likely to have struck any one else as me. The fellow knew me and referred to me as a temperance man, but I think he was drunk to that degree that he would have pitched into one of the Aldermen who voted not to enforce the law as quickly as he did me had they been where I was at the time.

Yours, C. A. NORTON, M. D.

A more popular conductor than Wyatt of the C. & P. R. R. runs not out of Portsmouth.

The friends of the Rev. Carlos Martyn are making a strong effort to induce him to remain as pastor of the North Church.

We learn that Mr. W. I. Trafton, the successful bal masque manager, is making arrangements for one of the most gigantic masquerades ever given under his management. Full particulars and date will soon be announced.

Tame pigeons are a Portsmouth institution. They multiply and replenish the earth. They also do so soil the North Church, that they are nearly as much a nuisance as the tobacco chewers who throng its steps and expectorate filth on the sidewalks. Let not one be abated without the other.

Hon. John L. Elwyn attended the meeting of the Historical Society at Concord, Thursday. A committee of six, of which Hon. Chas. H. Bell of Exeter is chairman, was appointed to confer with the Portsmouth committee in reference to the proposed monument at Odiorne's Point.

That Times man is an enterprising fellow —and humorous withal. Like Artemus Ward's bear, he's "an amoozing little kuss." When he isn't occupied in plundering our local column, just as likely as not he's nosing around to find a word misplaced in the CHRONICLE. And when he lights on an error of that kind it's a sweet boon to his weary soul. It does him more good than a drink of whiskey, bummed at a second-class bar-room. Oh, he's enterprising, and humorous, too!

Our readers will not forget that "Washburn's Last Sensation" is the amusement for to-night. The last entertainment given here by this troupe gave universal satisfaction. Washburn now brings additional attractions and still more wonderful performers. Frank W. Washburn is an athlete and comedian of uncommon merit, and with him are a host of performers who excel in song, dance, gymnastics, farce, comedy, caricature, instrumentation and contortion. The tickets are reasonable, 35 and 50 cents.

Max Adeler's Cats.

We are fond of cats. Unlike most persons, it pleases us, while lying in bed at night, to hear three or four cats out in the back yard spitting and yowling and waltzing around to their own mysterious music. So we always keep a cat on hand, in order to contribute our share to the entertainment. It is a singular fact, however, that one hundred and sixty-three successive cats which we have purchased have disappeared, one after the other. We would buy a cat, and have it around for a few days; and we would place it out in the yard, on a given night, before retiring. In the morning that animal would always have disappeared. And none of them ever came back! We regarded it as a somewhat singular coincidence that the man who lives just back of us always had fireworks on the very nights that our cats disappeared. Reflecting upon this circumstance, we purchased our one hundred and sixty-fourth cat—a tortoise-shell—and determined to watch her. We placed her out in the yard a few nights ago, and observed her from the kitchen door. The tortoise-shell frisked around for a while and ground out a few melodious screeches. Then she jumped upon the fence for the purpose of making acquaintances. While there, we perceived the man in the rear yard wipe that cat suddenly off the fence into a bag. Then the scoundrel tied a string to the tail of the tortoise-shell, and affixed the other end of the cord to a skyrocket. He then lit a match, and in about a minute that animal was switching around among the stars without a hair on her body. We observed where the rocket fell. It was within a lot inclosed by a high fence. We went out and climbed that fence early next morning, and there lay one hundred and sixty-four rocket-sticks, each with a singed cat tied to it with a string! Now we know why we missed our pets; and if we do not souse down on that firework-man with the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, it will be because the organization is hopelessly demoralized.

COAL.

HAVING contracted for a quantity of the above coal, we would call the attention of Manufacturers, Dealers and Consumers to the following different grades mined and controlled by the Company:

HARD WHITE ASH COAL,
FREE BURNING WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN RED ASH COAL,
NORTH FRANKLIN COAL,
LYKENS VALLEY COAL.

In order that all coal shall be shipped in good order, a most rigid system of inspection, both at the mines and at the shipping ports, will at all times be enforced. In every district of the coal region there will be appointed a number of competent persons skilled in the preparation of coal, as local inspectors, whose duty it will be to visit the several collieries daily to see that a proper force is at all times employed in removing slate, and to prevent, if possible, any coal being sent from the mines in bad order. In addition to these efforts at prevention, no means will be left untried at the shipping ports to cure the evils of careless preparation. At Schuylkill Haven, Port Clinton and Port Richmond, ALL COAL WILL BE SUBJECTED TO THE PERSONAL EXAMINATION OF A SKILLED INSPECTOR BEFORE IT IS SHIPPED, and if condemned by him, will be dumped in places provided for the purpose, and before being loaded into vessels WILL BE THOROUGHLY REPICKED AND CLEANED BY HAND.

Yankees Ahead.

Much has been said about a new invention in Europe to stop the echo in cathedrals and churches by stretching wires across the audience room. Rev. Joseph P. Taylor of Brunswick, Me., having suffered from an echo in his church, adopted precisely the same process, previous to the knowledge of the invention in Europe, it having been suggested to him by the analogy of waves broken against piling driven for the purpose, he judging that waves of sound would be destroyed in a similar way. His experiment in St. Paul's, Brunswick, Me., a building where the echo was exceptionally troublesome, is a perfect success, and we suggest to any persons who may need a similar remedy to make the trial. The church consists of nave, transept and chancel, and the wires are stretched across the arches of the open roof at two inches' distance from each other, at the intersection of the transept and nave, coming down to the corbels, and also across a portion of each of several arches in the nave, beginning at the top. Rev. Mr. Taylor suggest that the wires need not be nearer together than one foot. The wire is so small as not to be seen from the floor of the church, and consequently does not detract from its appearance.

—A Kalamazoo man withdrew his deposit of $1000 from a bank, and was paid in a single bill. He travelled all day trying to get that bill changed, and sat up all night, armed with a double-barrelled shot gun, watching his treasure.

WILLIAM CRITCHLEY,

Agent for Portsmouth and vicinity.

The Singer Still Triumphant!

At the Vienna Exhibition, the SINGER received the Medal of Merit, the Medal of Progress, and three other Medals for superiority of productions. These are the highest Sewing Machine Awards at Vienna. The SINGER received all the medals awarded to either of the competing machines, and two medals more than any other obtained. Then, in the name of Truth, what is it that prompts people to claim recommendations for the Diploma of Honor? The fact is, no Diploma of Honor has been given to any Sewing Machine Company.

But immeasurably more valuable is The World's Award as shown by sales—proved by sworn returns to the owners of the principal Sewing Machine Patents—which last year amounted to TWO HUNDRED AND SIXTEEN THOUSAND, SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHT (216,758) machines, nine out of ten of them being for Family Use. This is over 43,000 more Sewing Machines than were sold by any other company during the same period, and over One Quarter of all the machines sold in 1872. These enormous sales are owing to the long-tested merits of the Singer Machines, which meet the wants of the public in durability and simplicity of construction, and especially for great variety and excellence of work. That the users of Sewing Machines find these desirable qualities in the Singer beyond all others, is shown by the sales above given, aside from the awards of International Juries, either at home or abroad.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, DROPSY AND EHUMORS.

PERUVIAN SYRUP

Makes The Weak Strong.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building upon an Iron Condition.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

Daily Chronicle.

Why Duels are Fought.

[Curtis, in Harper's Magazine.]

The following interesting intelligence was lately published in the newspapers: "An affair of honor came off recently on the banks of the Styx between Sir Lucious O'Trigger and Thomas Noddy, Esq. Sir Lucious was attended by his friend Major O'Gahagan, and Mr. Noddy by Mr. Aspen Pigeon. The affair grew out of a little incident in which Mr. Noddy's nose and the thumb and forefinger of Sir Lucious's right hand were principal parties. The conditions of the meeting were simple. Upon tossing up a copper, Mr. Noddy, who was the challenger, won the choice of position. The combatants were to fire at any time while Major O'Gahagan counted five. The little preliminaries having been adjusted, the principals were placed, and the major said, in a clear voice, 'Are you ready? Fire!—one, two, three, four, five!' Mr. Noddy fired at the word, and his ball missed Sir Lucious. Sir Lucious covered his opponent without firing, and at the word 'four' discharged his weapon in the air. Mr. Noddy having expressed himself satisfied, the principals shook hands, and the whole party returned to town by the lightning express train from Tartarus, playing a cheerful game of poker, and subsequently they dined together hilariously at Buzzard's. Everything passed off in the most satisfactory manner, and it will gratify a large circle of friends to know that Mr. Noddy's nose is as uninjured as his honor."

Does anybody who reads such a paragraph suppose that Sir Lucious and Mr. Noddy know much about honor? Yet in the clubs and at dinner-tables there are plenty of people who think that this performance was unavoidable. Sir Lucious and Mr. Noddy are merely puppets. They would very much prefer to pop champagne corks at Buzzard's than fire pistols at each other upon the field of honor. Indeed, their example, and that of the kind of people who fight duels and figure as principals and seconds, is generally of no more importance than that of the brawls of bullies in the slums. The mischief lies behind them. It is in the justification of the duel by society, or by those in society who ought to know better. Respectable men and women read of a duel or hear of it, and say, gravely, "Yes, it seems rather absurd, and yet there are circumstances that make it unavoidable." Sir Lucious and Mr. Noddy are of the same opinion, and they must decide for themselves what the circumstances are. A newspaper exposes the wicked folly, and calls for justice upon those who break the peace by fighting a duel, and the same sentiment in society sneers at the meanness of soul which cannot see that honor transcends the law, and is complacently contented to know that "gentlemen" only can understand the duello.

Now in our society, Mrs. Grundy, and Mrs. Grundy alone, makes young men fight duels. It is she who erects the false standard to which the sentiment we are considering defers. What is called the honor concerned in a duel is merely the fear of what will be said. If Sir Lucious pulls Tom Noddy's nose, the young man trembles to think that "his set" will call him a coward if he does not challenge the offender, and his set in turn are afraid that they would be thought cowardly if they declared that a duel was always and necessarily wrong. It is all Mrs. Grundy. "It is a false sentiment," said General Hamilton, in substance, "but my influence would be impaired if I were thought a coward." Could a duel prove his bravery if his whole career had not proved it? And he fell to please a sentiment that he dispised. Certainly the weakest work of his life was the last, nor for any act did he ever offer so futile a plea—a plea which is the most conclusive argument against the deed, because the fact of the defense shows that he was conscious that the deed must be explained, and would not justify itself to the honorable and the wise.

A Miracle.

The Manchester Mirror gives an account of the wonderful story of Mrs. Sherman of Piedmont, N. H., relative to what she terms the appearance of Christ to her as given by herself in a letter. She is about thirty-five years of age, and previous to her sudden recovery, which she attributes to the personal exercise of Christ's healing power, had been an invalid for many years, during the greater part of the time being confined to her bed. Up to the close of August, she says, in a letter, she had not thought of anything but to pass her days on the bed of sickness; and as she looked forward to years of suffering in a bed-ridden state, she felt she must have more help from God to enable her to bear this life burden with perfect submission and patience,—and she wished to be able to say, "Thy will, not mine." She tried to surrender herself wholly into the hands of Jesus, and as she succeeded, and was rejoicing within herself at her success, she became conscious of this spiritual presence at her bedside, in the stillness of the night, and she felt she knew him as her Savior. He seemed not only to fill the room but her whole being with his loving smile. Her heart cried out in the imploring language of the leper of old: "Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean," and with the words came the cleansing power of Christ's most precious blood, and she was cleansed. She was distinctly conscious of Christ's presence, which seemed to fill the room like a cloud. "I never," she says "in all my life, had such a view of God's love in saving sinners." She felt that her sick and worn body was but a poor offering to make him for his dwelling in return for such wonderful love. But the spirit said: "He is able to restore and fit it up for his own temple." Then she knew the design of the Great Physician, whose presence had been such a comfort and strength to her, and when the voice asked her: "Believest thou that I am able to do this?" and she averred her belief in this miraculous power, she was conscious of His nearer approach to the bedside, and she felt His healing breath upon her face and heard the words: "And He breathed on them, and said, receive ye the Holy Ghost." The warm breath passing invigoratingly through her body, brought with it the feeling of returning strength and life. After a while she was told to move, and for the first time in several months found herself able to do so. Then came the command: "That the people may know the Son of man hath power on earth still to forgive sins, arise and walk," and obeying, she arose and walked across the chamber. This was on the night of the 27th of August.

From that time she commenced to regain the old-time strength and vigor she had not wholly possessed for fifteen years, and in a week she was able to make quite a little journey. In public and private she took all occasions to bear evidence to her complete recovery and the miraculous means by which it was accomplished. Of her firm conviction of the actual spiritual appearance of her Saviour, and the manifestation of his healing power, there can be no doubt. Her character, and that of her husband, Rev. Moses Sherman, for veracity, are equally beyond doubt. Of her cure, to whatever means it is attributable, there is no doubt. Piermont, the scene of this miraculous manifestation, is a quiet town of Grafton county, presenting no marked characteristic other than the prevalence to a wonderful degree of a deep religious feeling, and there are not wanting those who believe of Mrs. Sherman, that in her flesh she has seen God.

Farming in California.

[Nordhoff, in Harper's Magazine.]

The farmer in this State is a person of uncommon resources and ingenuity. I think he uses his brains more than our Eastern farmers. I do not mean to say that he lives better, for he does not. His house is often shabby, even though he be a man of wealth, and his table is not unfrequently without milk; he buys his butter with canned vegetables in San Francisco, and bread and mutton are the chief part of his living, both being universally good here. But in managing his land he displays great enterprise, and knows how to fit his efforts to the climate and soil. Thus, in the tule lands, when they are first drained, he finds it impossible to work the soil with cattle or horses; but this does not prevent him from putting in a crop, for after burning off the tules, which are tall reeds, and the high grasses, he sows his hundreds of acres with a coffee-mill wheat sower, and coolly turns a flock of sheep on the ground, driving them slowly and compactly over it, with the help of dogs to keep the flanks of his flock from scattering; and wheat thus "sheeped in," as they call it, has borne sixty bushels per acre. Nor is that all. Unless he depends upon a volunteer crop next year, he must plow the ground. It is still, however, commonly too light to bear up horses, and so he shoes these animals with stout wooden sabots, eleven inches long by eight broad, and thus they can walk at leisure and drag the gang-plow after them.

The gathering of the wheat crop goes on on all the valley lands with headers, and you will find on all the farms in the Sacramento Valley the best labor-saving machinery employed, and human labor, which is always the most costly, put to its best and most profitable uses. They talk here of steam plows and steam wagons for common roads, and I have no doubt the steam-plow will be first practically and generally used, so far as the United States are concerned, in these Californian valleys, where I have seen furrows two miles long, and ten eight-horse teams following each other.

Withal, they are somewhat ruthless in their pursuit of a wheat crop. You may see a farmer who plows hundreds of acres, but he will have his wheat growing up to the edge of his veranda. If he keeps a vegetable garden, he has performed a heroic act of self-denial; and as for flowers, they must grow among the wheat or nowhere. Moreover, while he has great ingenuity in his methods, the farmer of the Sacramento plain has but little originality in his planting. He raises wheat and barley. He might raise a dozen, a score of other products, many more profitable, and all obliging him to cultivate less ground, but it is only here and there you meet with one who appreciates the remarkable capabilities of the soil and climate. Near Tehama some Chinese have in the last two years grown large crops of pea-nuts, and have, I was told, realized handsome profits from a nut which will be popular in America, I suppose, as long as there is a pit and a gallery in a theatre; but the pea-nut makes a valuable oil, and as it produces enormously here, it will some day be raised for this use, as well as for the benefit of the old women who keep fruit-stands on the street corners. It would not be surprising if the Chinese, who continue to come over to California in great numbers, should yet show the farmers what can be done on small farms by patient and thorough culture. As yet they confine their culture of land to vegetable gardens.

To the farmer the valley and foot-hill lands of the Sacramento will be the most attractive, and there are still here thousands of acres of land in the hands of the government and the railroad company to be obtained so cheaply that, whether for crops or for grazing, it will be some time before the mountainous lands and the pretty valleys they contain north of Redding, the present terminus of the railroad, will attract settlers. But for the traveller the region north of Redding to the State line offers uncommon attractions.

Who Fought the Kearsarge?

A correspondent of the Dover Enquirer, writing from Washington, says:

"The death of Admiral Winslow calls up the sinking of the Alabama by the Kearsarge, for which the press universally, so far as I know, give the credit to the Admiral. This is no wonder, since he was Commander of the Kearsarge, and received a vote of thanks from Congress for having done that gallant act. Yet from information which I have no doubt is correct, and which can be verified, Admiral Winslow is not entitled to that credit. Instead of seeking that contest he avoided it, and the battle would never have been fought had not his gallant under officers insisted upon it; and when that was not sufficient went further until he yielded to their demands and allowed the fight to be undertaken. The credit of managing the Kearsarge in that memorable contest belongs to Capt. James B. Thornton, a grandson or great grandson of Matthew Thornton, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. It was largely to his resolute determination that Winslow yielded when the fight was undertaken. Had he not been interfered with after sinking the Alabama, the Deerhound would not have been allowed to take off Semmes and his piratical crew to the safety of a foreign port. The Navy Department was astonished when the vote of thanks passed Congress, and men who claimed to know the facts declared that a Court of Inquiry would have been more appropriate than a vote of thanks.

Capt. Thornton is too modest a man, too good an officer, to ever have claimed what belonged to him. The statements came from sources who could have no motive to misrepresent, and if ever the credit was to be claimed where it belonged, I have felt it to be now, when the press are universally calling attention to the action. The Kearsarge was built at our Navy Yard, named for one of our mountains, and the great achievement which links her name in the brightest pages of our naval history, was under the direction of a son of the Granite State."

The survivors of the crew of the Kearsarge resident in this vicinity give the credit of fighting the battle to Commodore Thornton, who is as modest as he is gallant.

Mrs. Rand left the house for a short time. Upon her return she found the building filled with smoke. She proceeded to investigate and was not long in discovering that during her absence a basket of wood had caught fire and was consumed. The fire had burned through the floor and things began to wear a serious look, but a few buckets of water just where it would do the most good, quickly subdued the flames.

Patrick O'Brien was found dead in the road about two miles from Great Falls on the 15th, with his skull fractured. It appears from what can be ascertained, that the deceased, with another man named Horace Tuttle of New Market, were driving towards Wells, both under the influence of liquor. At about eight o'clock they were descending a steep hill at a rapid rate, when both were thrown out of their wagon. O'Brien struck his head against a rock, killing him instantly. Tuttle was badly bruised, but, too drunk to get up, the wagon fell on the top of them, and there they lay all night. O'Brien was about forty-five years of age and leaves a wife and three children. Anniversary of the Boston Fire.

[Boston Cor. St. John Globe.]

The anniversary of the fateful day is near at hand; and the scenes of ruin have been recalled again and again, and the papers have from time to time, published the progress of reconstruction. Considerably more than one-half the black waste has been rebuilt. The architecture of the new district involves beauty, strength and durability, and in this respect exceeds that of the old. In the material of exterior construction there is much greater variety than before, granite fronts having been formerly predominant. Other and lighter shades of stone have been very generally used in reconstruction in preference to granite. Competent judges estimate the relative proportions in frontage as follows: Stone fronts, five-eights of the buildings now up or started; brick fronts, including those with stone trimmings, five-sixteenths of the total number; iron-fronts, one-sixteenth. Of the stone fronts, one-eighth are marble, and about another eighth are granite. Officially, for purposes of inspection a distinction is made between fire proof buildings and non-combustible buildings. There is only one fire-proof building on the burnt district, the Post Office. Wherever there are floor timbers, stairways or other interior work of wood, the building is not deemed fire-proof. If the exterior, including the roof, displays no wooden surfaces, the building is classed as non-combustible. All the roofs of the rebuilt burnt district are and will be noncombustible. Three-fourths of the buildings already up have flat roofs, covered with metal or with tar and gravel, the latter covering being regarded as preferable. There are a very few sloping or pitched roofs, leaving the remaining one-fourth, or nearly one-fourth, non-combustible Mansards. The fronts of the new Mansards are very generally of brick. All elevators are required to have railings and trap-doors at each story, to be kept closed when not in use. In a few instances these trap-doors are self-closing, but a model of this kind that is wholly satisfactory in working has not yet been produced. The new buildings of the district are not generally as lofty as those of the old. Most of them are four stories and but few are six stories.

Boston has as yet not even talked of building a monument to commemorate the burning of her city, or rather the last part of it, the granite heart of it. But like Chicago, Boston needs no monument. Her new stately buildings and commendable enterprise constitute a monument more lasting than any shaft could possibly be. Next to this we need an effective fire department—a reorganization of the department. The subject still hangs fire, but the Board of Aldermen, at its last meeting, yielded to the public opinion and not able to withstand the storm of indignation that it gathered for refusing to appoint a Fire Commission, now promises to comply with the universal demand for a practical change in the fire department system. The struggle to take it out of politics will be a hard one, but the safety of the city cannot be endangered for the mere purpose of enabling a "ring" to have fat jobs at the expense of the tax-payers, who now think it high time that reform be realized in one department of the city management, at least.

New Publications.

WOOD'S HOUSEHOLD MAGAZINE, for October, brings to us the treasures it has been gathering the past month, and all are deserving of notice. Each has its own peculiar value, and "Maggie" holds up this, that and the other literary gem and archly seems to say, "What do you think of this?" and "Isn't this nice?" and "Look at that!" And we glance at them all and say, "Yes! Yes! All we good!" One dollar a year. Address, WOOD'S HOUSEHOLD MAGAZINE, Newburgh, N. Y.

The October number of HARPER'S MAGAZINE is crowded with fresh and entertaining matter, and contains over sixty finely executed engravings. The following is the table of contents: A Lady's Enterprise, by Marie Howland, with fifteen illustrations; L'Envoi and Song, by Alfred H. Louis; General Sherman in Europe and the East, by Col. J. C. Audenried, with seventeen illustrations; The Lordship of Coria, by Paul H. Hayne; The Hampton Normal and Agricultural Institute, by Helen W. Ludlow, with twelve illustrations; Mennon, by Ellis Gray; "Dat Taddeus," by Ellis Gray; Who was Right? by D. R. Castleton; Our Girls, by Anna C. Brackett; The World and I, by Nelly M. Hutchinson; The Home of Paul and Virginia, by S. S. Conant; In a Tobacco Factory, by Mrs. M. P. Handy, with ten illustrations; Lottery, by Julian Hawthorne; Detective Pinkerton, by General R. B. Marcy; Hero Worship, by Constance F. Woolson; A Simpleton, A Story of the Day, by Charles Reade; The Republican Movement in Europe (Tenth Paper), by Emilio Castelar; Semper Fidelis, by Annie Chambers Ketchum; A Loss to the Profession, by Mrs. Frank McCarthy; Recollections of an Old Stager; The Judical Record of the late Chief Justice, by John S. Benson; and the usual editorial departments.

The November GALAXY will begin a new serial story, by Justin McCarthy, called "Linley Rochford." Mr. McCarthy's recent novel, "A Fair Saxon," has placed him among the clever novel writers of the day, and this story will be gladly welcomed by his friends. Secretary Welles' articles on Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Seward will be continued in the November and several succeeding numbers of the GALAXY and promises to be quite a complete history of these two great men as connected with Mr. Lincoln's administration.

PETERSON'S MAGAZINE for November has the steel engraving, "Crossing the Brook," very beautiful. So, also, is the mammoth colored steel fashion plate. A prominent feature of this Magazine is its copyright novelettes, two of which appear in this number, "Taco," by Miss Hodgson, and the "Lost Inheritance," by Mrs. Ann S. Stephens. The price of this Magazine is Two Dollars a year. Specimens of the Magazine are sent, gratis, if written for. Address Charles J. Peterson, 306 Chesnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE (Am. reprint) for September contains: How John Was Drilled; The Partisans—book X; Don Carlos; Duke of Madrid; My Active Subalterns; Liberty, Equality, Fraternity.—Mr. John Stuart Mill; The Sparrows of the Temple; New Books. U. S. Circuit Court.

[Exeter News-Letter.]

In the United States Circuit Court, holden the past week in this town, Judge Clarke presiding, the following cases were disposed of:

William Little, plaintiff in error v. Lucian B. Clough, assignee of John M. Whiting in Bankruptcy, defendant in error. Writ of error from district court in an action wherein Clough, as assignee, sued Little or a quantity of shoe pegs, purchased at auction at a sale of bankrupt's effects, which Little refused to take after the sale or pay for. Suit was brought by the assignee and the case referred in the district court. Judgment was rendered for defendant in error.

In the case against William Crawford, who was indicted for taking from the post-office and opening letters directed to persons in Chester, a continuance was ordered on the ground of sickness of one of the respondent's witnesses. Crawford had several friends who endorsed for him, and they state that they took from the post-office the notices of the non-payment of his notes, assured the endorsers they were taken up, and then obtained new endorsements from the same parties, causing several of them to become bankrupt.

United States vs. E Leveen & Co. The defendants were indicted for fraudulently omitting in their schedule of costs, as bankrupts, part of their property assignable under the bankrupt act, and the counsel for the defendants claim that the indictment was bad, because it did not set forth all the circumstances of the bankruptcy, notice to bankrupt, &c., and various matters were claimed to have been omitted which were essential, and that there was no averment that the assignee accepted the office, &c. The district attorney moved to amend the indictment in these particulars. Decision reserved. The respondent was in the clothing business, having stores at Manchester and Portsmouth.

The trial of cases, United States vs. Chas. Gillis, indicted on five complaints for stealing from the mails, was begun, when the demurrers to the indictments were argued, after which the cases, four in number, were continued on the question of the legality of the indictment. This was an indictment for robbery of the United States mails while respondent was serving as Postmaster at Hillsboro', where he was arrested in February last.

Henry E. Hunter, Robert W. Day and Henry R. Veille were arraigned on an indictment for depositing in the post office at Hinsdale, for delivery, obscene matter. Hunter and Day plead not guilty; Veille filed a plea in abatement on the ground of misnomer. The case was continued to the May term, and the respondents were ordered to recognize in $7000 bail.

The court adjourned on Tuesday to the second Tuesday of January next.

Married Naval Officers.

Much embarrassment has been created at the Navy Department by the receipt, during the past month or so, of frequent applications from officers, especially those newly married, backed by strong influence, and certificates from medical men, for leave of absence on the ground of "special family matters," and the chief of the office of detail has felt compelled to render a decision to the effect that the office cannot recognize any competent naval or other medical authority as being valid to the effect that the presence of the officer is necessary on such occasions; and, moreover, that if sea orders were to be revoked on such grounds the frequency of the occurrence would render it impossible for the Department to supply the full complement of officers for vessels going into commission.

A TRIUMPH OF MEDICAL ART.

Yes, a triumph we call it, when medicine can be so "fixed up" as to be pleasant to take and yet accomplish the object intended. Such a medicine is Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets, samples of which the writer procured and tested in his own family. The Pellets (little pills) are about one-fifth the size of an ordinary pill, made of highly concentrated root and herbal extracts, and sugar-coated.—Frankfort, (Ind.) Weekly Cresent. 7pl.

Troops of Ailments Vanquished.

On account of the promptness with which it checks the fevers generated by unhealthy exhalations, Hostetter's Bitters is considered an indispensable family medicine on the borders of our Southern and Western rivers, and in new settlements where the plough and the axe are for the first time disturbing the solitudes of nature. Its reputation, however, is not confined to such localities. Wherever the elements of disease are rife it is the surest safeguard of health; wherever sickness prevails, it is efficatious as a remedy. Among the serious diseases which it is guaranteed to control are indigestion, biliousness, and all the minor ailments connected with derangements of the stomach, the liver, and the Bowels—such as heartburn, headache, flatulence, costiveness, nausea, distaste for food, languor and debility, palpitation of the heart, trembling of the hands, noises in the ears, disordered vision, disturbed sleep, and mental inquietude. As these physical and mental disturbances tend to a general failure of all the powers of the system, they should be at once corrected, as they always may be, by a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL,

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption.

The few compositions which have won the confidence of mankind, and become household words among not only one but many nations, must have extraordinary virtues. Perhaps no one ever secured a wide a reputation, or maintained it so long, as AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It has been known to the public about forty years, by a long-continued series of marvellous cures, that have won for it a confidence in its virtues never equalled by any other medicine. It still makes the most effectual cures of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, that can be made by medical skill. Indeed, the CHERRY PECTORAL has really robbed these dangerous diseases of their terrors, to a great extent, and given a feeling of immunity from their fatal effects, that is well-founded, if taken in season. Every family should have it in their closet for the ready and prompt relief of its members. Sickness, suffering, and even life is saved by this timely protection. The product should not neglect it, and the wise will not. Keep it by you for the protection it affords by its timely use in sudden attacks.

Local Matters.

City Council.

In Board of Mayor and Alderman, Thursday evening, a petition of Harry J. Freeman for damage to him by laying out of Albany street, was referred to the Mayor and committee on streets to report. The Mayor presented the agreement of Mrs. Burroughs for use of a lot of land in rear of Court house yard. Petition of T. S. Coffin, for widening of highway at corner of Sagamore and Little Harbor Roads, was referred to committee on streets with power.

Leave was granted to George M. Marsh to encumber State street for repairs.

Petition of R. H. Beacham for compensation for land taken to widen Fleet street, April 22, 1869, was referred to committee on streets.

Petition of John H. Wells for drive-way was granted.

Petition of Wm. R. Preston and others for the erection and maintenance of a gas post and light front of Post Office was granted.

The committee on streets reported in favor of petition of George Taylor and others for sidewalk on Bridge street. Report was accepted and the sidewalk was granted.

Same committee reported in favor of petition of widening South street between Wibird and Union street. Voted: That the petition be accepted when the owners of the land will release the same.

Same committee reported in favor of petition of Geo. Stott and others that action be taken to obviate the difficulties of the present defective sewers in Hanover, Tanner and Adams streets. Report was accepted.

Same committee reported in favor of the petition of Drew and others for acceptance of Cambridge and East Park streets. The report was accepted, and East Park street was accepted. The report was then laid on the table.

The Mayor and committee on streets were requested to confer with Joseph Parry relative to widening Fleet street at his land.

Voted: That the committee on streets be authorized to remove the gas post at corner of Deer and Vaughan streets to a more convenient location.

The special committee who were directed to confer with the owners of the water privilege in South Mill Pond reported that the same can be bought for $6000. Report accepted and laid on the table.

Subject of ancient burying ground on Green street was referred to committee on burying grounds, to report condition, ownership, &c.

THE WATER QUESTION—SENSIBLE TALK.

The committee on subject of water reported recommending that the City purchase of the Portsmouth Aqueduct Company their property.

Voted, That the same committee be directed to ascertain from the Aqueduct Company upon what terms they will sell their property to the city.

Laconics.

They do say that Horace Lamos does get up the A-one-est clam-bakes at Dover Point.

E. P. Nowell is at work on a new volume entitled "Gems of Odd Fellowship, in Prose and Poetry."

Second Assistant Engineer William L Baillie has been detached from this Navy Yard, and ordered to the Fortune.

Wibird's hill is spoken of as a good location for the proposed new chapel for the colored people.

Exeter will spread itself next Wednesday with a fireman's muster and regatta. The "boys" from Portsmouth are expected.

The new Catholic Church is to be opened and brilliantly illuminated for the first time next Monday evening, with a fair to be held through the week.

Elias P. Wentworth of Greenland has sued the town of Stratham for injuries received by being thrown from his carriage last year.

Gov. Hartranft of Pennsylvania has recently re-appointed Col. William H. Hackett of this city a commissioner to take acknowledgements of deeds, &c., to be used in that State.

"Musicus," a correspondent of the Journal, shows considerably jealousy of a lady teacher of music, in a communication to that paper. The world isn't large enough for "Musicus" and other people, it seems.

Commodore E. G. Parrott of this city will speedily become a rear-admiral, Rear Admiral Goldsborough going on the retired list. The latter entered the naval service, June 18, 1812. Commodore Parrott entered Dec. 18, 1831.

In the horse or anti-horse article we copied from the Globe, the sentence "the ability and especially the inability of the horse," should read the ability and nobility. Gov. Harris should of course read Gov. Goodwin.

The Journal says the County Commissioners have granted the petition of George G. Lougee of Rye for a private highway through land of Abram Drake, from the rear of the Sea View House out to the new road to the sea. Mr. Lougee was adjudged to pay Mr. Drake $250 for the land taken.

The reporter of decisions of the Maine Supreme Court, Hon. E. B. Smith, writes that all the judges of that State concurred in the decision denying Wagner a new trial, having no doubt of the propriety of his conviction and that the murder was committed in Maine. Now let the cruel villain hang.

The York Institute has received a small package of hay cut and mowed in 1828. In that year a gentleman in Cornish cut and mowed some hay. It was removed recently. On taking it out it looked about as bright as if just put in. It was offered to cattle and they took hold of it with as much apparent avidity as though it were but three months instead of forty-five years old.

The Piscataqua isn't bridged yet at Dover Point. The contractor has been waiting for a lot of log piles. A few days ago a portion of the bridge consisting of piles, stringers, etc., were carried away by the force of the current. Most of the material sunk beyond recovery. The piles were some of the longest used in the construction of this immense bridge.

The Times is doing its best to maintain its reputation for enterprise and humor. We have before alluded to these features of its character, and now we have only a word of advice to tender. Enterprise is good in its place, but there is such a thing as running it into the ground, and unless our contemporary curbs its energy, it stands in imminent danger of being known as the Mrs. Gamp of Portsmouth. That excellent matron, it will be remembered, enjoyed the acquaintance of a mythical Mrs. Harris, whom nobody else had ever seen or heard of, but who was conveniently handy for quotation and reference when Mrs. G. thought her statements needed a weightier sponsor than herself. So the Times, when it wants to bolster an assertion with something better than its own word, always has a "prominent citizen," or a "staunch republican," or perhaps simply a "gentleman," conveniently at its elbow, on whom all doubtful statements are saddled. As remarked, the idea is not original, but the Times beats Mrs. Gamp, in that she was faithful to the ideal Mrs. Harris, while the Times has a regular assortment of fictitious personages to refer to when needful. Mrs. Gamp is an old friend of the public, and they don't want to see her robbed of her reputation by the transparent imitation the Times has patented.

COAL.

HAVING contracted for a quantity of the above coal, we would call the attention of Manufacturers, Dealers and Consumers to the following different grades mined and controlled by the Company:

HARD WHITE ASH COAL,
FREE BURNING WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN RED ASH COAL,
NORTH FRANKLIN COAL,
LYKENS VALLEY COAL.

In order that all coal shall be shipped in good order, a most rigid system of inspection, both at the mines and at the shipping ports, will at all times be enforced. In every district of the coal region there will be appointed a number of competent persons skilled in the preparation of coal, as local inspectors, whose duty it will be to visit the several collieries daily to see that a proper force is at all times employed in removing slate, and to prevent, if possible, any coal being sent from the mines in bad order. In addition to these efforts at prevention, no means will be left untried at the shipping ports to cure the evils of careless preparation. At Schuylkill Haven, Port Clinton and Port Richmond, ALL COAL WILL BE SUBJECTED TO THE PERSONAL EXAMINATION OF A SKILLED INSPECTOR BEFORE IT IS SHIPPED, and if found passed by him, will be dumped in places provided for the purpose, and before being loaded into vessels WILL BE THOROUGHLY RE-PICKED AND CLEANED BY HAND.

We keep a fine stock of the above coal on hand, also

Portsmouth Chronicle.

A Clever Game.

One of the most ingenious and daring thefts on record occurred at Brierly Hill, England. A lad entered the store of a grocer of the place and bought a roll of bread, which he asked the man to stuff down the back of his jacket, as his companion outside would take it away from him if he saw it. The grocer complied with the apparently innocent request, and having had his loaf placed in its original hiding place, the boy left. Hardly had he quitted the store, when another lad, rushing in, exclaimed: "Do you know what that chap has done? He has prigged your watch!" The grocer looked in horror, and saw his watch chain dangling and his watch gone, "There he goes!" said his informer, pointing to a figure seen going down the street; and the store keeper immediately rushed out in pursuit, leaving the store unguarded. When he reached the corner the supposed thief had vanished, and returning to his store he found that during his absence the informer had emptied the till and gone off with the money. The two thieves have so far escaped capture.

WILLIAM CRITCHLEY,
Agent for Portsmouth and vicinity.

The Singer Still Triumphant!

At the Vienna Exhibition, the SINGER received the Medal of Merit, the Medal of Progress, and three other Medals for superiority of productions. These are the highest Sewing Machine Awards at Vienna. The SINGER received all the medals awarded to either of the competing machines, and two medals more than any other obtained. Then, in the name of Truth, what is it that prompts people to claim recommendations for the Diploma of Honor? The fact is, no Diploma of Honor has been given to any Sewing Machine Company.

But immeasurably more valuable is The World's Award as shown by sales—proved by sworn returns to the owners of the principal Sewing Machine Patents—which last year amounted to TWO HUNDRED AND NINETEEN THOUSAND, SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHT (219,758) machines, nine out of ten of them being for Family Use. This is over 4,000 more Sewing Machines than were sold by any other company during the same period, and over One Quarter of all the machines sold in 1872. These enormous sales are owing to the long-tested merits of the Singer Machines, which meet the wants of the public in reputation and simplicity of construction, and capability for great variety and excellence of work. That the users of Sewing Machines find these desirable qualities in the Singer beyond all others, is shown by the sales above given, aside from the awards of International Juries, either at home or abroad.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, DROPSY AND HUMORS.

PERUVIAN SYRUP

Makes The Weak Strong.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the milk of human food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures by "building up," simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building upon an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

AMERICAN & FOREIGN PATENTS.

R. H. EDDY,
SOLICITOR OF PATENTS,

For Inventions, Trade Marks or Designs.

No. 70 STATE ST., OPPOSITE KILBY ST., BOSTON.

After an extensive practice of upwards of thirty years, continues to secure patents in the United States; also in Great Britain, France and other foreign countries. Caveats, Specifications, Assignments, and all papers for Patents, executed on reasonable terms with dispatch. Researches made to determine the validity and utility of Patents of Inventions, and legal and other advice rendered in all matters touching the same. Copies of the claims of any patent furnished, by remitting one dollar. Assignments recorded in Washington.

No Agency in the United States possesses superior facilities for obtaining Patents or ascertaining the patentability of inventions.

All necessity for a journey to Washington to procure a Patent and the usual great delay there, are here saved inventors.

TESTIMONIALS.

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse. CHARLES MASON, Commissioner of Patents."

"I have no hesitation in assuring inventors that they cannot employ a man more competent and trustworthy and more capable of putting their applications in a form to secure for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office. EDMUND BURKE,
Late Commissioner of Patents."

"Mr. R. H. Eddy has made for me over THIRTY applications for Patents, having been successful in almost every case. Such unmistakable proof of great talent and ability on his part leads me to recommend ALL inventors to apply to him to procure their Patents, as they may be sure of having the most faithful attention bestowed on their cases and at very reasonable charges. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA,
FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.
This compound of the vegetable alteratives, Sarsaparilla, Dock, Stillingia and Mandrake with the Iodides of Potassium and Iron makes a most effectual cure of a series of complaints which are very prevalent and afflicting. It purifies the blood, purges out the lurking humors in the system that undermine health and settle into troublesome disorders. Eruptions of the skin are the appearance on the surface of humors that should be expelled from the blood. Internal derangements are the determination of these same humors to some internal organ, or organs, whose action they derange, and whose substance they disease and destroy. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA expels these humors from the blood. When they are gone, the disorders they produce disappear, such as Ulcerations of the Liver, Stomach, Kidney, Lungs, Eruptions and Eruptive Diseases of the Skin, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter and Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Ulcers and Sores, Rheumatism and Neuralgia, Pain in the Bones, Side and Head, Female Weakness, Sterility, Leucorrhœa arising from internal ulceration and uterine disease, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation and General Debility. With their departure, health returns.

Tragedy at Cornell University.

Mortimer M. Leggett, the young man who was killed while being initiated into the mysteries of the Kappa Alpha Society by his fellow-students of Cornell University at Ithaca, N. Y., was the youngest son of Commissioner Leggett of the United States patent office. It appears that a party of about twelve students met at nine o'clock on the south bank of Six Mile Creek. In the party were C. W. Wason, C. H. Lee, Henry Northup and W. P. Sturges, besides young Leggett; the names of the whole party are not known. From the testimony taken at the coroner's inquest it appears Sturges and Northup had left Lee, Wason and Leggett standing near the brink of the gorge through which the creek runs, the latter probably having his eyes blindfolded. The three stood for a moment on the edge of the bank, when a rustling of bushes was heard, and Sturges and Northup on turning around found that the three had disappeared. Hearing groans, they immediately took means to reach the bottom of the gorge, and in doing this they met W. H. Flint and F. H. Hiscock, fellow-students. The whole party proceeded to the bottom of the ravine, and there were found on an abrupt bank, about fifty feet from the top, Leggett and Lee lying close together. Wason being about eight feet distant. A carriage was procured, in which Wason and Lee were placed with but little trouble; but it was necessary to wrench a gate from a neighboring fence to carry Leggett on. It was found that Leggett, after falling over the precipice fifty feet, had struck on his head, fracturing the skull, breaking the bones of the nose and partly dislocating the neck. He lived about half an hour after the fall, but was unconscious and constantly moaning, "Oh! Don't!" "Take it off! Take it off!" referring, it is supposed, to the bandage over his eyes. Wason had his collar-bone broken, and was slightly bruised about the body. Lee had his thigh severely bruised, and, it is feared, suffered internal injuries. The inquest will be continued as soon as Wason and Lee are well enough to testify. Master Leggett, although only seventeen years old, was a graduate of the Columbia law school of Washington city, and had been placed in the Cornell University about four weeks since, for the purpose of taking a course in the mechanic arts, in order to fit himself for more usefulness in the patent office. He was a native of Zanesville, Ohio. His family is at present in Washington, to which place the remains have been forwarded. Wason is a member of the sophomore class from Cleveland, Ohio. Lee is also a sophomore, and comes from Orange, N. J.

Danbury News.

There is no sin so offensive as that of some one else.

A Danbury jeweler is confident the day will come when sleeve-buttons will be sold by the pound.

Froude writes that he cleared over here nothing but his expenses, his passage home and five hundred dollars over. It is fortunate that he made enough to buy his ticket back, or there would have been a contribution taken up.

Some one suggests, with most excellent good sense, that the immense door-plates worn by the ladies on their belts might be utilized by engraving thereon the wearer's name, age, residence, fortune, or expectations, and stating whether heart free or engaged.

One of those miserable boys whose sole object in this life appears to be the making of extraordinary faces at honest and industrious store clerks, mistook a roll of oil-cloth for a roll of carpet hanging in front of a Main street establishment Saturday evening and making a sickening grimace at the clerk, who stood in the door, doubled his fists and struck the inoffensive roll a tremendous blow. Then he put the fist under the other arm, and doubling up his body ambled swiftly away, while the clerk retired to the store to dry the tears of a new-found joy.

One of the most extraordinary things in this world is the conduct of a hen on the approach of a team. If she is standing in the way at the time, she remains there, and you instinctively stop your horse, only to discover that she is safely out of the way. And if she is on one side of the road she immediately dashes into the centre and brings you up again, while the cold sweat forms on your back at the thought of the damages. And it is a little singular that while you are confident you never saw a hen run over nor ever heard of such a thing, yet no number of trials can keep back the perspiration from your back, or prevent you from drawing up your horse to the imminent danger of his hind legs.

A wealthy musical enthusiast in New York, who had a box at both opera houses, spends his opera nights in rushing from one house to the other behind a fast team, in order to hear the choice parts of both operas, usually managing with such surprising skill that he misses everything worth hearing altogether.

A terrible prairie fire swept 25 miles of the country near Omaha and South-western Railroad, in Saline and Jefferson counties, Nebraska. Many houses and large quantities of grain were destroyed. At Wilbur ten school children were caught in the flames and three perished on the spot, three more will die, and four were dreadfully maimed but will recover. Mrs. Moody, the mother of three of the children, ran to help them and received fatal injuries.

A remarkable case of somnambulism or temporary insanity, says the Boston Herald, is now a current topic of gossip at Lynn, Mass. As we hear it, a young married man of good moral habits awoke, or rather arose from his bed in a semi-unconscious state, Saturday night, and without any provocation dealt two or three heavy blows to his wife, who was asleep beside him. She was considerably frightened, and uttered cries which attracted her mother to the room. The man then set upon her and knocked her over a stove, and turned to his wife's sister, who by this time had arrived, and struck her in the face, breaking her teeth. He then left the house, clad only in his night-clothes, and ran for help to a neighboring street, telling parties whom he roused up that murderers were in his house trying to kill him and his family. He finally came to consciousness, and has since acted as usual, save that his mind appears a trifle dull. He says that he had some idea of what he was doing, Saturday night, but was powerless to prevent his actions.

—Smith says he doesn't know much about music, but if it's a great thing for a man who has spent thousands of dollars on his voice and has studied for years to sing high chest C, he thinks his kettle at home can beat it; for every evening, with cheery voice, its sings its way to high chest tea. And it's only a dollar kettle too.

State Teachers' Association.

The coming meeting of the Association at Claremont, commencing Thursday evening the 30th inst., is to be one of importance and interest. Some of the subjects to be discussed are the following: "How can our common schools be improved?" "Departmental instruction;" "Educational Monthly;" "Health of school children." Many of the leading educators of the State will take part.

The officers of the Association desire a general attendance and participation in the exercises by teachers, school officers and all friends of education, that thus the influence of the meeting may be felt through the State. Those attending the meeting will be entertained at low rates at hotels and private houses, and the principal railroads make a generous reduction of fares.

State News.

David Rowe and Charles Batchelder of Sandwich have trapped and slain a 400 lb. bear.

The custom, more honored in the breach, of serenading newly married folks, by a concourse of discordant sounds, is still maintained in many parts of the State. The town clerk of Hampton had a recent experience in this enjoyment, and not until he gave a treat to the midnight rioters was he relieved from the din of their insymphonious visitation.

Large gangs of men were employed on Sunday in deepening the new channel in the Cocheeho, back of the High School. As the bed of the river is a hard clay the current has no effect upon it in wearing it away, and consequently it has to be done with pick and spade.

An Obituary Editor.

The St. Louis Republican has an applicant for the position of obituary editor. His letter asking for the situation gives a sample of his abilities. He says:

"Our parents were wealthy but honest, and of course we are now poor; but we can live on a very little, because Mary Ann and I have made ourselves into a grange and buy at retail at wholesale prices.

"May be you have a full corpse to do your funny writing, so if you will engage me I will do anything in the obituarian line; it will suit our feelings better, for Mary Ann and I have been in affliction lately. Great-grandmother Peck died last week, aged CXIX. She died once before, when she was ninety-six, but just after she was laid out she seemed to remember somehow that she had forgotten footing a stocken for her youngest boy, who was only seventy-four years of age, so she came to again; and as winter was coming on, and so much knitting to be done, she concluded to keep on for twenty years or so. The doctor thinks if she ain't disturbed she is gone for good this time. Me and Mary Ann sat up with her to the last. And she was checked off into the full fruition of all her faculties. I couldn't help moralizing as I sat by her bedside how lean a person can get and yet consume so much gruel—she beat anything all hollow that I ever saw.

"Poor old soul, she was so lean that the mosquitoes had ceased to be a burden; they used to light on her and hammer on her skull with their bills till the room sounded like a telegraph office, then they would scratch their heads with their hind legs and sail out of the window, worn out. She seemed to gain a litte flesh after we came here from Chicago, and got new spirits; but somebody told her that her name was accidentally left out of Edwards' Directory, and she fell off again. She hadn't walked any to speak of for the last twenty-two years, and it used to console her to think how much she had saved on shoes. When I look at the old calico cushion with its faded roses that she sat embowered in since she was 104, I heave a sigh at the transitoriness of all sublunarian comfort. Her eyes got so weak that she wore seven pairs of glasses for a spell, but they warn't strong enough for her to get the sense out of her Scriptures, so we had a pair of opera glasses mounted so she could wear them on her nose. She set up the heftiest part of the day before she snuffed out, and told me many things confidentiarily. She remembered distinctly when General Washington got the check cashed that Oakes Ames gave him for signing the Pacific Railroad bill, and she was quite a big girl when Cyrus Field and Hendrick Hudson brung the Atlantic cable over in the Mayflower. What is home without a great-grandmother?"

Anti-Peddler Device.

In Virginia City, Nev., according to the Territorial Enterprise of that town, a gentleman has placed on each side of the gravel walk leading from his front gate to his door a handsome iron fence, the top rail of which is made of gas-pipe filled with small holes. Before he thus fenced his walk he was much troubled by book agents, map-peddlers, and other persistent cattle, but now all is lovely with him. When he sees a man enter his gate with books under his arm, he simply turns a cock and instantly a thousand streams of water dart across the whole length of the walk from side to side. The book peddler retreats to the gate, gazes wistfully up the walk for a time, concludes the man of the house does not want to see him, and then travels, wondering what sort of infernal machines people will next invent for the discouragement of honest industry. This beautiful and useful invention is not patented.

Arrested for Murder.

The body of the woman found murdered on the bank of a river at Lewiston, Maine, has been identified as that of Mrs. James Lowell, whose husband is now living at Lawrence, Mass. Mrs. Lowell has been missing about three years, and a detective ascertained that up to that time she had been living with her husband at Lewiston. The Lawrence Eagle says the officer learned that the relationship between the husband and wife was not of a harmonious kind and that their brief marriage had been fraught with many disclosures of a scandalous nature. The consideration of these circumstances in connection with the fact of the rather mysterious disappearance, (thought little of at the time) of Mrs. Lowell, gave rise to what seemed to be competent grounds for arrest on suspicion. It was learned that James Lowell had re-married and moved to Lawrence, where the officer sought him.

Lowell appeared to recognize him, but showed no signs of guilt. But when he was informed that he was wanted to answer to a charge of murder, it is said that he showed visible signs of weakness—perhaps fear. On being asked if he would come with the officers without resistance, he said "certainly," and accompanied them to the police station, where he now occupies a cell. Lowell has lived in Lawrence two years.

The prisoner says he was born at Reansley's Lake, Me.; moved to Lewiston, Me., 29 years ago; am 31 years old; lived there until 1861, when I went into the army, and remained there one year; with the exception of a short time that I spent at Cape Cod, working on the railroad, and a few months on a farm at Greene, Me., I have not lived outside of Lewiston for 29 years; married my first wife after three weeks' acquaintance in the fall of 1871, at Lewiston; she had lived in that place but three weeks at that time; didn't know whether her name was Mary Ann Burton or Mary Ann Nichols; sometimes she said it was one and sometimes the other; found out through her mother, who came on a visit, that her maiden name was Burton, and that she had been married before to a Mr. Nichols, by whom she had had three children; I did not know before she had been married; kept on living with her as well as I could; she would frequently run away, and stay away three or four weeks at a time; moved out on a farm at Greene; my wife ran away from me there; found her after some time living with an old widower at Auburn; she ran away some time in the summer or fall of '69, and I have not seen her since; heard she was in Boston once, and once heard she was in Norway, Me.; her mother told me that her husband was in California, that he could not live with her and the devil could not live with her; the last fuss before she left, was between my wife and her mother; it was a year and a half after her departure that I married my present wife; had no divorce; didn't think I needed any as my wife was a married woman when I married her; never had seen my present wife at the time my first wife left me; my mother-in-law lived about 15 miles below Bangor; married my second wife in Lewiston about a year and a half after my first wife left; lived there only about four weeks after being married to my second wife; my work has mostly been teaming; came here because my wife had a sister living here; came here not quite a year ago.

Tadpoles.

[Hartford Courant.]

Everybody knows that tadpoles become frogs; nobody knows what becomes of frogs. So long, then, as the creature remains a tadpole we understand it; when it becomes a frog it leaps beyond our ken. How great a thing, then, it would be for human knowledge if the tadpole could be cherished and the frog delayed—the known encouraged and the unknown put away! Upon this noble effort an industrious naturalist is now at work. His theory is that the tadpole cannot change to a frog without going ashore and hopping about, and so shaking off that part of his frame which would be very inconvenient to the frog, and, indeed, with which he would not be a frog. To demonstrate this theory, the professor has a tank with steep sides, and in it he has a number of tadpoles, which have already been compelled to remain tadpoles for several years for lack of a landing. From day to day he watches his charge, and still they are themselves. Apparently the demonstration is complete, and so long as they live, or he lives, they will be tadpoles. If they never become frogs, then our knowledge about tadpoles will not be quite what it was before, but the uncomprehending frog will be disposed of. Meanwhile these victims of the professor wiggle along from week to week and he himself is triumphant. If he does not "hold the eel of science by the tail" he certainly has somewhat such a grip upon the unlucky tadpole, and it is in the cause of science.

A Generous Lodger.

[Biddeford Times.]

Last night a stranger appeared at the station in this city and desired lodgings for the night, alleging that the hotels were full and he could not get accommodated. Our obliging officers gave him the best accommodations the station afforded. Confined in jail was a fellow from Saco who had been pulled up for drunkenness and, failing to pay his fine, was in close confinement, awaiting action of the officers. Jim—that is the name the fellow answers to—kept up a continual howl, so much so that the lodger could not sleep. He asked Jim what the matter was, and the latter replied he had been fined, and as he had but two dollars, the officers would not let him out for that. The stranger enquired the amount of the fine, and on being informed drew his wallet, called the officers and paid it and Jim departed in peace, leaving the stranger to enjoy in quiet as best he might the balance of the night. It isn't very often that parties with plenty of money in their pockets apply for lodgings at the station house.

A Wheel Within a Wheel.

Phelps, the New York treasury thief, was appointed to the position he abused on the recommendation of Senator Fenton, who left the republican party for the party's good, last year, and espoused the cause of Greeley. A New York dispatch says for a long time he kept an advertisement in a morning paper, announcing for sale positions in his office. It was in this way he was caught. Men were sent to answer the advertisements, and he actually offered positions to laborers for a fee of $500. Up to a year ago he was playing this confidence game. The Patterson investigating committee did a good deal in backing him up and procuring men to swear all manner of thing, against the custom-house department. It will be remembered that Ex-Senator Patterson of New Hampshire made a great stir in denouncing custom-house frauds in New York about the time Congressman Dawes did likewise. Both came to New Hampshire and retracted their charges, Patterson at that time being extremely anxious for a re-election, which fortunately for the republican party he did not obtain.

A TRIUMPH OF MEDICAL ART.

Yes, a triumph we call it, when medicine can be so "fixed up" as to be pleasant to take and yet accomplish the object intended. Such a medicine is Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets, samples of which the writer procured and tested in his own family. The Pellets (little pills) are about one-fifth the size of an ordinary pill, made of highly concentrated root and herbal extracts, and sugar-coated.—Frankfort. (Ind.) Weekly Cresent. 7gl.

Troops of Ailments Vanquished.

On account of the promptness with which it checks the fevers generated by unhealthy exhalations, Hostetter's Bitters is considered an indispensable family medicine on the borders of our Southern and Western rivers, and in new settlements where the plough and the axe are for the first time disturbing the solitudes of nature. Its reputation, however, is not confined to such localities. Wherever the elements of disease are rife it is a sure safeguard of health; wherever sickness prevails, it is efficatious as a remedy. Among the serious diseases which it is guaranteed to control are indigestion, billiousness, and all the minor ailments connected with derangements of the stomach, the liver, and the Bowels—such as heartburn, headache, flatulence, costiveness, nausea, distaste for food, languor and debility, palpitation of the heart, trembling of the hands, noises in the ears, disordered vision, disturbed sleep, and mental inquietude. As these physical and mental disturbances tend to a general failure of all the powers of the system, they should be at once corrected, as they always may be, by a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

Catholic Fair.

The Fair which commences this evening in St. Mary's Church promises to be well worthy of patronage. The friends of Rev. Canon Walsh, the pastor, and also those of the church, Protestant and Catholic alike, have generously responded to its claims and the result is an overwhelming variety of articles, a large portion of which are not flimsy, toyish trumpery that usually crowds the tables on such occasions, but good and substantial articles both useful and ornamental. The spacious auditorium of the church forms one of the best halls of exhibition that we ever saw. Its interior presents the appearance of a magnificent bazaar of almost every conceivable thing from the bib of an infant to the elegant and costly silver and gold presents. To enumerate all of the attractive things that are to be disposed of would occupy much more space than our paper will allow, and so we must confine ourselves to a brief mention of a few leading articles, many of which are to be disposed of by lot, while a part are to be awarded to the lady or gentleman for whom the public shall decide.

The first gift in order of enumeration is a massive Silver Ice Pitcher and Refrigerator, with elegant gold-lined silver salvers and slop-bowl, to be awarded to one of the two prominent brewers, Messrs. Alexander Robinson and Josiah Morrison; the article falling to the one who receives the most votes.

The next is a large and heavy Silver Trumpet that may well be coveted by any member of the Fire Department who expects to attain the position of Foreman of his company. This is to be awarded to the Foreman who receives the highest number of votes.

A gift of another elegant Silver Ice Pitcher, from an association in Boston called the "Revere Associates," is to be presented to one of three certain gentlemen who rejoice in the christian appellation of George. We would be willing to be called George for quite a length of time could we thereby gain so beautiful a pitcher.

A fourth costly article of award is a magnificent ebony cane with a solid gold head fit for even a king, but to fall into the hands of one of two gentlemen whom the patrons of the fair regard as the best candidate for the unenviable position of mayor of this city.

A handsome gold band china tea-set forms another attractive feature of the exhibition. A magnificent crystal cross with a massive gold chain attached, brought from Spain, and presented by Mrs. Patrick Gallagher, is a rare article of value, and is to be disposed of by raffle.

A rich and elegant Benediction Veil, with a perfect representation of a chalice wrought in gold, may be set down among the costly donations, having been presented to the fair by Rev. Father Walsh. Also two handsome Ottomans, beautifully wrought by Miss Walsh and donated to the Festival.

An arbutus dressing-case, brought from the vicinity of the lakes of Killarney, (the only place in the world where may be found the rich arbutus tree from which the box is made,) is a perfect gem.

Another desirable as well as valuable article to be given to the Irishman receiving the greatest number of votes, is an Ulster overcoat of Irish frieze, which will serve to keep warm and comfortable on a wintry day the fortunate Hibernian who receives it. We must not omit to mention a rich piece (20 yards) of imported Irish poplin of an elegant shade of green. The above comprise only a small part of a generous assortment of contributions that fill the room.

The church is lavishly dressed in bunting, the work of decorating having been performed by Mr. Wm. H. Moore, Seargeant Bucher and other members of the marine corps at this station, reflecting much credit upon their skill and good taste in this direction. The flag of the pope—with the cross keys, tiara with triple crown, &c., surrounded by Irish, French, American, Brazilian, Portugese and other flags, are conspicuous among the decorations. Father Walsh informs us that the people of Portsmouth, irrespective of creed, have been very lavish in their donations. His thanks are especially tendered to Mrs. Goodwin, the wife of our respected ex-Governor, Mrs. Ball, Mrs. J. J. Pickering, Mrs. Aaron Hill and many others, also to the officers of the navy yard for courtesies. Messrs. Mendum, Stavers, Blumauer, French, Rider, and Arshowe have been particularly mindful of the wants of the proposed Festival and have contributed accordingly.

The Fair opens this evening with an entertainment to be given by the children of the House of the Angel Guardian in Boston.

Kittery.

Our enterprising townsman, W. W. Henderson, has opened a branch store for the sale of dry goods, in Trefethen's block, Kittery, for the accommodation of the surrounding towns. The post-office and apothecary store, a grocery, a clothing and furnishing store are in the same block. The upper hall in the block is occupied by the Odd Fellows. The other hall will be dedicated this week and is to be let for lectures, dramatic entertainments, etc., quite a number of engagements having been made already. The fun-loving citizens of Kittery will not be obliged to go so far to be entertained as in the past, and poor shows which have gulled them in company with Portsmouth people will not be likely hereafter to draw them away from the comforts of home. This will eventually aid first-class performances, as none other will be likely to attract people three miles.

Polaris Poetry.

One of the saddest incidents of the Polaris expedition was the effect which the hardships, to which the crew were exposed, had upon Mr. Nathaniel J. Coffin, of this city, the carpenter. This brave man, who had hitherto borne an excellent character, was induced in a moment of madness to commit the serious crime of poetry. In the horrors of the Arctic midnight the unhappy carpenter composed numerous "copies of verses," which a heartless reporter has since had the cruelty to publish. The reputation of this unfortunate man is thus blasted, and peace of mind of his family and friends destroyed, by an error which he doubtless would never have committed in his sane moments. The following verse will show the nature of the unhappy carpenter's offence:

December 15.

Should we be all doomed here to stay—
Our grave, ship's bay—Polaris Bay—
Our great success would hardly pay,
Save to show those who come this way
That there were fools as big as they;
And while I live 'tis safe to bet
That all the fools are not dead yet.

Laconics.

The St. John and Bangor night express will be taken off, November 15.

Mr. John Kelley desires us to state that as soon as he discovered the truth of the story of the insults offered to ladies by the Frenchman in his employ, he at once discharged him, and that the disgusting intruder has left the city.

Next Tuesday evening, our citizens are to be favored with a first-class pantomime and variety company, that of Butler and Chrisdie. Robert Butler is known all over the country as a pantomimist, and the "Three Dwarfs" will doubtless fill the Temple.

A very large audience nearly filled the Temple, Friday evening, and "Washburn's Last Sensation" proved a rousing entertainment. To our brethren of the press, elsewhere, we can unhesitatingly recommend the company as the best in the variety line that has visited Portsmouth this season.

The "Atlantic" Wreck.

A force of five divers is still engaged in rescuing cargo from wreck of the "Atlantic" at Halifax, but the work proceeds very slowly as the vessel has slipped off the rock on which she was cast away, and now lies bottom up, greatly increasing the labor, difficulty and danger of working down there. The divers report that in one part of the vessel there are five bodies—four men and one woman. The woman is evidently a lady, as her underclothing is very fine in its texture and is trimmed with costly lace and richly embroidered. She is lying on her back, and one of the heavy iron plates of the ship has fallen so as to cover her body from the breast to near the knees. Her face has been so worn away that the features are unrecognizable, but she has small feet encased in very neat gaiters. The divers say that they will rescue the bodies if any one will offer a suitable reward, but as the premium formerly offered for the recovery of bodies has been withdrawn, they will not undertake the work which would, of course, be far more disagreeable than it was at first. Diving operations will soon have to be discontinued for the winter.

The Singer Still Triumphant!

At the Vienna Exhibition, the SINGER received the Medal of Merit, the Medal of Progress, and three other Medals for superiority of productions. These are the highest Sewing Machine Awards at Vienna. The SINGER received all the medals awarded to either of the competing machines, and two medals more than any other oblatned. Then, in the name of Truth, what is it that prompts people to claim recommendations for the Diploma of Honor? The fact is, no Diploma of Honor has been given to any Sewing Machine Company.

But unmeasurably more valuable is The World's Award as shown by sales—proved by sworn returns to the owners of the principal Sewing Machine Patents—which last year amounted to TWO HUNDRED AND NINETEEN THOUSAND, SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-SEVEN (219,757) machines, nine out of ten of them being for Family Use. This is over 43,000 more Sewing Machines than were sold by any other company during the same period, and over One Quarter of all the machines sold in 1872. These enormous sales are owing to the long-tested merits of the Singer Machines, which meet the wants of the public in versatility and simplicity of construction, and capability for great variety and excellence of work. That the users of Sewing Machines find these desirable qualities in the Singer beyond all others, is shown by the sales above given, aside from the awards of International Juries, either at home or abroad.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, DROPSY AND HUMORS.

PERUVIAN SYRUP
Makes The Weak Strong.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, be easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building upon an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invariably recommend others to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

AMERICAN & FOREIGN PATENTS.
R. H. EDDY,
SOLICITOR OF PATENTS,
For Inventions, Trade Marks or Designs.
No. 70 STATE ST., OPPOSITE KILBY ST., BOSTON.
After an extensive practice of upwards of thirty years, continues to secure patents in the United States; also in Great Britain, France and other foreign countries. Caveats, Specifications, Assignments, and all papers for Patents, executed on reasonable terms with dispatch. Researches made to determine the validity and utility of Patents of Inventions, and legal and other advice rendered in all matters touching the same. Copies of the claims of any patent furnished, by remitting one dollar. Assignments recorded in Washington.
No Agency in the United States possesses superior facilities for obtaining Patents or ascertaining the patentability of inventions.
All necessity for a journey to Washington to procure a Patent and the usual great delay there, are here saved inventors.
TESTIMONIALS.
"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse. CHARLES MASON, Commissioner of Patents."
"I have no hesitation in assuring inventors that they cannot employ a man more competent and trustworthy and more capable of putting their applications in a form to secure for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office.
EDMUND BURKE,
Late Commissioner of Patents."
"MR. R. H. EDDY has made for me over THIRTY applications for Patents, having been successful in almost every case. Such unmistakable proof of great talent and ability on his part leads me to recommend ALL inventors to apply to him to procure their Patents, as they may be sure of having the most faithful attention bestowed on their cases, and at very reasonable charges.
JOHN TAGGART."

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA,
FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.
This compound of the vegetable alteratives, Sarsaparilla, Dock, Stillingia and Mandrake with the Iodides of Potassium and Iron makes a most effectual cure of a series of complaints which are very prevalent and afflicting. It purifies the blood, purges out the lurking humors in the system that undermine health and settle into troublesome disorders. Eruptions of the skin are the appearance on the surface of humors that should be expelled from the blood. Internal derangements are the determination of these same humors to some internal organ, or organs whose action they derange, and whose substance they disease and destroy. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA expels these humors from the blood. When they are gone, the disorders they produce disappear, such as Ulcerations of the Liver, Stomach, Kidney, Lungs, Eruptions and Eruptive Diseases of the Skin, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter and Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Ulcers and Sores, Rheumatism and Neuralgia, Pain in the Bones, Side and Head, Female Weakness, Sterility, Leucorrhœa arising from internal ulceration and uterine disease, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation and General Debility. With their departure, health returns.

Daily Chronicle.

Theodora.

"Come, come, my dog, we'll turn in now; I'm tired with a long day's watching. Why, Coorie, what's the matter?"

And as the beautiful Scotch terrier came up, wagging his tail, the young cavalry officer bent his bright, handsome face, already bronzed by the Indian climate, over him, till his own black, curly locks mingled with Coorie's yellow coat.

"What's the matter, dog? We've picketed down Angus (his horse) readily saddled; we've had our supper, and the natives are all abed; so come along, too, mon chien, the Sepoys are a long way off as yet."

Throwing away his cigar, Edward St. Clair rose up, and entered his little bungalow—the only white man in it or near it, for the next picket was a couple of miles to the south.

Really tired the young man threw himself on the couch and closed his eyes, bidding Coorie "lie down." But Coorie was unaccountably restless and fidgety; he whined, laid his pretty black nose to the ground, went to the window, and finally, as sleep seemed stealing over the young officer, he uttered a short bark, which instantly made the handsome grey eyes open wide again—on the alert directly.

"What now, Coorie?"

The dog jumped on him, licking his face, and pulling his arm violently the moment he sank back.

"You won't let me sleep then—Ha! what is that?"

A man's suppressed voice beneath the window: "St. Clair, for Heaven's sake awake! the Sepoys are upon us!"

Captain St. Clair was on his feet in a second, and at the window.

"Darville? Right! I'm armed and cloaked, and my horse saddled."

"Come then," returned the other, hurriedly; "we must fly for our lives. My horse is here; I have ridden like the wind."

St. Clair caught up his faithful little dog, swung himself out of the window to the ground, and swiftly and silently fetched out his horse—a magnificent chesnut. To mount and put spurs to their animals was but the work of a moment. They could hear the advancing enemy through the jungle; they could almost see the natives, like demons, surrounding the bungalow; and shuddered to think of the narrow escape they had had from a terrible, tortured, and ignominious death.

Neither drew rein for an hour, heading their way to the nearest station. Then, as they rode on more carefully, St. Clair told the story of Coorie's strange instinct or presentiment, during which the little animal perfectly understanding the loving voice and touch as he nestled in the heavy folds of his master's military cloak looked up gratefully.

"We heard their advance," Darville then explained; "and being such a small detachment, Colonel Manvers fell back to the south and sent me on to you with orders to fly and warn the stations between this and Burrat-Peor, where you know the main body lies."

"Yes. Ah, there is the station below. How quiet they are! Too quiet, Darville; I don't believe there is a single regiment to be relied on!"

A little more and he pointed suddenly:

"Great Heaven! too late! The villains have risen. Look, look! we never thought to see such an awful sight a few short weeks ago!"

Blackened ruins where the station had been; corpses mauled and disfigured in every possible way that devilish savagery could invent—men, women, and children; horrors too great, details too fearful to harrow the reader with here. For those who remember the Indian Mutiny of '56 it is enough; for those who do not, let them rest in ignorance. This is no tale of its horrors, but simply a true incident out of the many episodes which occurred during that sad time.

Both rode on in silence, though Major Darville, the elder and less impressionable was the first to discover his power of speech.

"We must keep on; a day's journey will bring us to Burrat-Peor."

"Yes. What is that?" he said, suddenly drawing rein.

"I hear nothing but the beasts howling. Ride on, man; ride on."

"I won't till I hear it again. By heavens it is the voice of a child!"

"A wild cat you mean; they cry like a baby."

"It was not a cat. Ha! again: a child buried alive where that brushwood grows."

He sprang to the ground, and seized hold of a brush of greenwood close by, when lo! it came up with a readiness that almost threw him backwards; the sagacious dog tore away the root in a minute.

"It is a dry well," said Darville.

"And a little child at the bottom," added St. Clair, bending over the well. "It is very shallow; I can get it out if you will keep a lookout and hold my horse."

Darville anxiously watched him disappear; but in a moment, his arms reappeared, holding a little white form, which they placed on the edge while he scrambled out again himself; an easy feat for a strong, tall, young fellow.

It was a little child three years old, whose extreme beauty neither terror, tears nor suffering could hide.

"Poor little creature!" and a tear fell on the fair little face, as the young soldier clasped the child to his breast. "How could anything born of woman hurt you? Your flask, Darville, quick."

Captain St. Clare gave his charge some brandy, then biscuit soaked in brandy, till the exhausted frame began to revive. She smiled up tremulously in the young, handsome face, and then, with a cry of terror, clung round his neck.

"Hide me! hide me! Oh mamma! mamma!"

"My child, my darling: they shall not hurt you, though they have murdered your mother."

"She put—me—there," sobbed the child—"till—till she came."

"She will never come, darling. I must be father, mother, all to you now: we must ride on quickly, Darville, or the fiends will be down on us."

He held the child closer, lifted Coorie—not even his new human treasure could make him forget his faithful companion—and remounted, wrapping both child and dog in his cloak within the strong clasp of his right arm.

"I am ready," he said; and the horses refreshed by their rest, started off at a good, steady pace along the track which was the best route towards Burrat-Peor. The poor child, who must have suffered terror for many hours which, perhaps, few could estimate, slept soundly in her protector's arms.

"What a beauty she is," said Major Darville once. "Poor little lass! I wonder who she is—yours now I think, St. Clare, by Jove; and I fear no one lives to claim her."

"Poor baby—no, and, look here, Darville, and if no one does own her, I'll not give her up to anybody in the world."

"Stuff, boy," said Darville; "you're not rich; what can you do with the child? How the fellows would chaff."

"Let them; I care nothing. I can laugh who win; I will deny myself to save for her."

"Edward St. Clare, it is a thousand pities that your father and mother are dead!" exclaimed Darville. "They would have been proud of their son, as I am this moment of my friend."

"Chut! Darville, see here is a smooth piece; give rein. They shall never take us alive!"

The day was dawning when the fugitives again slackened speed and finally stopped by a stream to let their horses drink and graze, and take some refreshments themselves from Major Darville's well-provided saddle-bags.

"Ten minutes' rest," he said, bringing forth provisions. "Come, pretty one, wake up for some breakfast."

The little one was so deeply asleep that her young protector placed her, cloak, dog, and all on the ground before she began to wake up, with a scared look in the great blue eyes, which changed to a sunny smile as they went from one face to the other. Poor orphan! she was too young to know her loss. She, however, quickly settled herself against St. Clare, and ate her sandwiches in a pretty, dainty, lady-like way which told as much as her appearance, she was a child well born, of well bred people.

"What is your name, golden head?" said St. Clare, tenderly drawing the silky, glittering curls through his long, slender fingers.

The little bright face looked up into his as the sweet, silvery voice said simply:

"Mamma's Pet."

A child-like answer, but so vivid in its sad picture of what she had been and what she was now that it went like a physical blow to the young brave heart. St. Clare suddenly covered his face, but he mastered himself at once.

"I can't help it, Darville. I'm a perfect fool when women and children are concerned. My poor baby don't you know any other name?"

"No—only that—Mamma's Pet."

"Poor baby! you shall be my little girl now, my Pet."

"Till mamma comes," said the child thoughtfully.

"Darville, how can I tell her? What shall I say?—do?"

The Major thought of his own wife and little girl in England, and cleared his throat before he answered gruffly:

"Don't tell her anything."

"Listen, baby," said Edward: "when mama hid her pet in the well, what did she say?"

"She said the wicked Sepoys were coming, and she would fetch me again when it was safe, or else God would send some good man to me; and you see He did, because He sent you, didn't He?"

"Child, child, you are a lesson, indeed, to me. Yes, He sent me, indeed, and you to me. Darville, I will call her Theodora."

"Why? I am no classic."

"It means, 'God's gift.' Listen again, sweetheart. Your mother will never come for you again—never see you till—till you see her in heaven; she has gone to heaven, my poor child."

"Never come again—nor papa either?" The coral lips began to quiver piteously—the large eyes to fill. Darville turned aside. St. Clare lifted her and rose—sighing—for he dared not speak—that they must remount; there was danger in every minute's rest.

"We can push on to Burrat-Peor," he said, as they started off again, the child and dog once more nestled in his arms.

"If you can," said Darville. "For it will be then over forty-eight hours since you slept, won't it?"

"Yes, that's nothing. I shan't hurt."

The invaluable cloak sheltered the child as much from the sun's heat as from the cold night dews. It was a long and painful ride, full of trouble and anxiety, for how did they know but what they might meet a body of savage rebels?

Can you not imagine vividly the wild joy and relief with which, toward evening, the well known sound of a drum beating to quarters came upon the ear, and the smoke from many a fire floated upward through the trees; for the strong, jovial English, under Colonel Hayter, were encamped just outside Burrat-Peor."

The pickets were passed, and the fugitives rode up to the commander's tent, and dismounted as Colonel Hayter came out.

"Why! you! Major Darville, and Captain St. Clare! what new tale of horror do you bring?" said the old soldier, grimly "You both look done up. And what has the boy got?"

The dog was frisking about his feet, the child peeping out of the mantle, clinging tightly to her protector all the time, the more that the officers came crowding round to welcome the fugitives.

"A child, sir, a wee lassie," said the young officer, half laughing and coloring as he threw back his mantle.

"What a beauty!" exclaimed several.

"Where did you pick her up?"

"Didn't know you were married," said one slyly.

"What is your name, pretty one?" said Colonel Hayter stroking the curly hair.

"Mamma's Pet."

The deep unconscious sweetness, the pathetic tale it told in two words, struck them all. There was a hush for a moment, broken by Colonel Hayter.

"We must see to our fugitive friends' refreshments, baby and all. Jervis"—to his orderly—"supper, and get ready the room next to mine, and send your wife to take care of this little girl. Come in and tell me your newsand story and despatches."

This Darville, as the superior in rank, did shortly, the child listening with dilated eyes to the part which told of her parents' murder and her own rescue; but when Mrs. Jervis came in she hid her face in Edward's breast and burst into tears.

"No, no—oh, don't send Mamma's Pet away! she'll never come, you said, and Pet has only you to love! she'll go to sleep so good—here."

The young man's eyes were full, and sooth to say, so were the others.

"Colonel, I can't say no, to the little motherless thing. Mrs. Jervis will kindly take her to wash, or whatever care she needs, and bring her back quickly. My darling, you shall come back to me."

The child suffered the good woman to take her away, but in about ten minutes she brought her back, washed and "tidied." She sat on her protector's knees, and gravely ate her supper from his plate, much to Colonel Hayter's amusement.

"Well, St. Clare, it certainly is a strange idea for a young fellow like you to saddle himself with a baby of three or four years old. Look! she's asleep."

"Faith, so shall I be, Colonel, for it's fifty hours since I slept a wink. Please excuse us. Darville, smoke a cigar on my behalf. Good night—come, Coorie."

Man, child and dog vanished into the inner room, and in less than ten minutes the Major followed suit.

It was. The young officer, just as he was, had thrown himself on the low pallet, his handsome, noble face slightly turned, as if the last look had rested on the little child. She lay fast asleep on his breast, nestled close within his arms and the heavy cloak, which wrapped them both and made a bed for Coorie, who was curled up close to his master's hand; the last wakening movement of which had been to caress him.

"He is as handsome as the babe is beautiful," said Colonel Hayter. He's a noble fellow, though, of course he has his faults. I wonder if he looks to the future in taking charge of his forlorn birdie."

"I verily believe he has during our flight," answered Darville.

"I wish he was my son," half murmured the colonel, laying his hand tenderly on the sleeper's rich black locks; and he sighed. His own son, Darville knew, had been a grief to his parents, and had died in no very reputable manner.

"Well, good night, Darville," he said. "I suppose we shan't see any of you at breakfast."

"Not me, Colonel, certainly, but I dare wager that fellow there will turn up with his child. I never saw such a wide awake customer in my life." And he too turned in.

II.

"Mamma's Pet" soon became the pet of the whole force at Currat-Peor, and to Captain St. Clare the very light and core of his existence, the very idol of his life; in vain older and wiser heads advised this and that plan; to one and all he shook his own fine head and answered:

"No, as I cannot discover her parentage, she is my child."

"But you cannot keep her with you in India."

"I can and must. I can't afford to send her to England, and she'll do up country."

"But as she grows up?"

"Oh, time enough to think so far forwards; we may not then be alive. At present she can stop actually with me, and Mrs. Jervis attends to her. Why the ladies couldn't spare her. We fall back on Lucknow in a few days."

The little Theodora, as her protector called her, perfectly idolized him, and when off duty never lost sight of him; and as every one petted and spoiled the sweet, bright fairy, from grey-haired Colonel Hayter down to the drummer-boys, no one ever objected to her presence as an inevitable addition to Captain St. Clare. Certainly any nature less docile, less delicate and fine would have been spoiled; but instead, the pure, gentle little being was a perpetual purifier to her young protector; even the careless jest, which is not convenient, or too light words, such as young men indulge in among themselves, was checked for the sake of the child hearer, till soon the habit was altogether lost. No ridicule, kindly or unkindly, moved the young officer; and time, and danger, and privation, many a hard conflict fought, many a deed done, and many separations endured, only strengthened the tie between the man and the child.

This is no story of the Mutiny; it is enough for this that during it, Edward St. Clare, whose luck carried him to all the posts of danger, as Lucknow, Delhi, &c., won promotions and honors and the right to much prize money; the two first were immediate, the latter, of course a thing of the future. When the terrible rebellion was at length ended, and peace restored on a different basis, under her Majesty's direct government, Edward St. Clare found himself a marked and distinguished officer. The new viceroy of India, indeed, singled him out to place in command of an important garrison, and there the child Theodora flourished and grew, clinging the closer to him after each separation which active military duty made necessary: for it was long, and even years, before occasional disturbances were crushed out.

The scene changes from India's gorgeous clime to the golden autumn of an English home, where the silver waters of the Thames flowed past the garden of a pretty villa taken for the autumn by a quiet gentleman and his wife.

Perhaps that is he standing by the French window, within which his wife sits reading; if so, we should surely know him; a fine, erect, military-looking man, rather over forty, grey too now, as he was not thirteen years ago.

"I wonder where Theodora has got to with her letter," says Major Darville. "How she ate me up with her great eyes, when I told her he had actually started for London, and might be down here any hour."

"Odd that Colonel St. Clare has never married," remarked Mrs. Darville; "but there's time yet; he will always be young. I wonder he even let that child go with you."

"It was a terrible parting, Mary, but it was necessary. She was thirteen, and a tall, lovely girl; he far too handsome and young to keep her with him. Besides, though, he a thoroughly well educated man, had instructed her in all branches of useful knowledge, yet at thirteen she needed in accomplishments and such things the finishing process; moreover, her health began to feel the climate. So did mine, and as I was coming home for good, and we were glad to have her, he wisely sent his darling away."

"I wonder whether he will find her much altered? At her age, passing from childhood to girlhood is a great change—and she is seventeen now. I suppose she is devouring his letter and photograph, and starting at every falling leaf, thinking it his step."

Was he not right? See that slight, beautiful girl with such a wealth of golden curls, bending over a photograph in her hand. It is of a dark and very handsome man, looking only about thirty, though really near ten years older than that. We know that bright, noble face as well as she does—the child whose first orphan sleep had been upon his breast.

"Ah, listen! Was that a falling leaf, or a light sep treading over the grass? Was that little Scotch terrier, springing so frantically about her, a fancy, or that tall graceful figure a dream?

"Edward! Edward;" and the girl threw herself into his open arms, with a passionate, almost convulsive burst of weeping.

"My child! my treasure! you have not forgotten me then?"

"Forgotten!"

Then he held her off. Was this the little forlorn child he had rescued thirteen years ago—this beautiful girl, who now smiled, and then half-colored beneath his earnest gaze, as if in that second, like a flash, the unfailing, subtle woman's instinct had suddenly felt that there was—aye, must be—a change such as never could be altered back again, that she could never be to him the child of past years, never again be with him hour by hour, as of yore. The realization burst upon him suddenly and irresistibly of the fact that it was no more the child and youth, but the girl of seventeen and the bearded man—not "Mamma's Pet" and Edward, but Theodora and Colonel St. Clare.

He drew her close to him again, and bent over her as she hid her face against his breast.

"Child, child! tell me, if you can, if my dream is vain. Here on this heart your infant head was pillowed—this heart which has never beaten save for you alone. We must part—unless you can say again those treasured up childish words—unless you can be St. Clare's wife."

The dark locks swept her golden tresses as he stooped to catch the soft whisper.

"I love you, Edward, better than life. I only want to be with you. Oh, those long four years!"

Past now the dreary separation; and Major Darville smiled as Col. St. Clare brought her in, and said:

"Ah, I thought it would be so, long ago; that this fairy had crept right into your heart, and written there 'Edward's Love' instead of 'Mamma's Pet!'"

—The Pioche Record says: "We have many and beautiful meteors these Autumn nights. One evening a tender swain said to his 'sweetness': 'Some of the falling stars seem' to descend immense distances, and they seem to leave behind them a bright path, as if they were celestial messengers flying from their feet, and making a track of light behind.' To which the soft, sweet maid replied: 'They allers make me think about the circus man that swallowed fire.'"

—A hen-pecked gentleman determined to sup with a party of friends, against the will of his wife. He was resolved that he would, and she that he should not go. He did not go. His friends missed him; and, just for a lark, invaded his residence, where they found him and his wife sitting in their chairs, fast asleep. He had given her an opiate that he might slip away, and she had given him one that he might not.

Very Absent Minded.

[Max Adeler.]

The most absent-minded man we ever knew was our friend General Mumm. He lost one of his legs in the late war, and he always wore a patent artificial leg full of springs and joints. Some times when he started out in the morning, he would get his leg on hind part foremost, and then would go straddling down the street with one set of toes pointing east and the other set pointing west. His right knee would point in another direction, and the old man would bob up and down like a jumping jack worked with a spring. Presently he would meet us and come jolting up to say that he wished we would pitch into the Highway Department for leaving the pavements in such a rascally condition that a man couldn't walk straight.

Previous to the war, while he was down at Cape May one summer, he took a bluff path early in the morning, and while in the water he got to meditating upon some abstruse subject, and forgetting himself, he came walking out upon the beach and up the street to the hotel, dressed in nothing, but a sad, sweet smile, just as the people were coming down to breakfast. Only a very short time ago, he hitched his horse to a sulky, with the horse's nose pushed up against the dasher, and started off backwards without noticing the direction. At the end of the first half mile the vehicle jammed up against a tree, and the General shot out over the horse's tail. If he doesn't get out of his coffin at his own funeral, and insist upon going as pall bearer, it will be singular.

Notice to Church Wardens & Music Committees

MR. R. Q. NORTON, late of Boston, will remain in Portsmouth for the purpose of tuning and repairing Pianos and Organs. Correspondence solicited with churches out of town, having organs needing repairs. Organs rebuilt, voiced and tuned in the most thorough manner. Estimates given on jobs; also specifications for new organs. Churches about to buy will save money by consulting me, as I am under the control of no maker and work for the interest of the party buying.

Local Matters.

To-Night.

Butler and Chrisdie's pantomime troupe appear in a pleasing variety performance, at the Temple, this evening. "The Three Dwarfs," a new sensation in the pantomime world, will be brought out in good style, a "Modoc" sketch will close the entertainment, and there will be other and miscellaneous attractions, including songs by Fannie Morrallo, athletic performances by the LaRue brothers, and Sanfords character singing, and clog dances by the LaVard sisters and roller-skating by Kynock and Smith. The company is highly recommended.

Lacontes.

The Schooner Mary Ann McCann, arrived at Newcastle on Saturday, with 220,000 feet of lumber for the new hotel.

Failure of an Experiment.

Mr. Brand, Speaker of the English House of Commons, has been making an interesting experiment in co-operation, which experiment, English papers tell us, has proved a complete failure. Mr. Brand is a large land owner and a well-known friend of the laboring classes. About a year ago he conceived the idea of improving the condition of the workmen on one of his farms by admitting them to a share of the profits. The Glynde farm, which he chose as the scene of the experiment, is one which ordinarily pays 10 per cent. yearly on the capital employed. This well-known fact might be supposed to present a temptation to laborers to invest in it whatever wages they could put by. To make the laborer feel safer, Mr. Brand proposed to guaranty a certain fixed interest (2 1-2 per cent.) on the investments. At the time this offer appeared it was praised for its liberality, and the result has been awaited with much interest. No Englishman was in a better condition than Mr. Brand to test the feasibility of the scheme, for he possessed the entire confidence of his hands. They knew they could trust absolutely to his promises, and that he would be glad to have the plan turn out favorably for the investors. A year has passed, and now Mr. Brand announces at a harvest festival that not a single man in his employment has accepted his offer. The collapse of this experiment, undertaken under the best of auspices, will have a depressing influence, it is thought, on most of the English philanthropists who have long sought to elevate the condition of labor. At about the same time that Mr. Brand has been practically testing the feasibility of co-operation in farming, a number of coal owners and iron masters in England have proved that the measure is equally impracticable in mining and iron work. We read of one case in which a collier has proposed to lease a coal pit on moderate rent to a body of his laborers, and let them run it and divide the profits among themselves; but they do not take him up. These offers have alt emanated from men who appear to be sincerely desirous to do good to the workingmen; they are as far removed from selfishness as anything human can be. The English papers comment on these cases, and say that the failure of these experiments, from which much substantial good was anticipated, is to be very much regretted. They think that some different method of elevating the laboring classes must be resorted to before any satisfactory results can be reached.

A Plan for an Ocean Railway.

Mr. C. A. Bennet of Racine, Wis., exhibited in Chicago a few weeks ago a model for a marine railway. It consists of a cabin placed upon a deck 20 feet long and 12 feet wide. Instead of resting on a hull this rests on an endless chain of floats or pontoons, 2 feet deep and 1 foot wide, which lie crosswise under the cabin. This chain is made to revolve round large wheels, one at each end of the car, by means of an engine, so that it resembles the horse-tread in a threshing machine. Half of the belt is thus always in the water, forming a foundation for the cabin or car to pass over. By the continued rotating movement round the wheels the sections, as fast as they are released from the water at the stern, are carried over the stern wheel and forwarded between the deck and cabin to the fore wheel, where they are let down into the sea. Mr. Bennett intends trying to cross the Atlantic this fall. His boat has thirty floats, with a total buoyancy of 18 3-4 tons; the wheels are 52 feet in diameter, and make 150 revolutions a minute. Allowing for resistance of atmosphere and water, he expects to make 30 miles an hour easily.

Remarkable Echo in Northern New York.

Lake Awosting, on the Shawangunk Mountain, has a remarkable echo. Eight distinct words rapidly uttered are repeated plainly eleven times in succession, and when the innumerable reiterations that follow have seemingly died away in the distance, the whole sentence comes back from a central focus of sound with a terrific shout, followed by a dead silence. The firing of a gun is succeeded by a perfect fusillade of musketry along the cliffs, ending in a clap of thunder.

—A newly married couple found themselves in a railway carriage with only one fellow-passenger, who appeared to sleep profoundly. Soon the lady began to call her young husband all the endearing names that natural history can supply. The traveler roused up, begged the lady to call him a "Noah's Ark" at once and allow him to sleep quietly.

—"What would you have done with a case like that of Tichborne in your country?" asked John Bull of his American cousin. "Well, I guess the jury would have made a joint-stock concern of it, and divided the proceeds with the party that had the most greenbacks."

—The editor of the Huntsville, Mo., Herald pops the question in his paper in this public fashion: "There's a certain girl in this town who can carry our smokehouse keys for life, if she'll only say the word."

A TRIUMPH OF MEDICAL ART.

Yes, a triumph we call it, when medicine can be so "fixed up" as to be pleasant to take and yet accomplish the object intended. Such a medicine is Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets, samples of which the writer procured and tested in his own family. The Pellets (little pills) are about one-fifth the size of an ordinary pill, made of highly concentrated root and herbal extracts, and sugar-coated.—Frankfort, (Ind.) Weekly Cresent. 7gl.

Troops of Ailments Vanquished.

On account of the promptness with which it checks the fevers generated by unhealthy exhalations, Hostetter's Bitters is considered an indispensable family medicine on the borders of our Southern and Western rivers, and in new settlements where the plough and the axe are for the first time disturbing the solitudes of nature. Its reputation, however, is not confined to such localities. Wherever the elements of disease are rife it is the surest safeguard of health; wherever sickness prevails, it is efficatious as a remedy. Among the serious diseases which it is guaranteed to control are indigestion, biliousness, and all the minor ailments connected with derangements of the stomach, the liver, and the Bowels—such as heartburn, headache, flatulence, costiveness, nausea, distaste for food, languor and debility, palpitation of the heart, trembling of the hands, noises in the ears, disordered vision, disturbed sleep, and mental inquietude. As these physical and mental disturbances tend to a general failure of all the powers of the system, they should be at once corrected, as they always may be, by a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters.

'73 REUNION.

THE HISTORY OF THE RETURN OF THE SONS & DAUGHTERS OF PORTSMOUTH, JULY, 1873," is just published. It contains 96 pages, octavo, and is a thorough detail of everything relating to the three Festal Days,

The Reunion, July 4th,

High School Reunion, 5th,

The Praise Meeting, 6th;

and containing a

Verbatim Report

of every speech that was uttered at the Tent on the 4th and 5th, besides giving a full report of all the Reunion preliminary movements in Portsmouth, Boston and New York. Much of the matter of this work has never yet appeared in any form, and we think it will prove interesting to all who participated in the Three Days' Jubilee.

The work is for sale at the Chronicle Office, J. H. Foster's Bookstore, and at Wm. R. Preston's.

aug2-eagtf E. A. JOY, General Agent.

The Singer Still Triumphant!

At the Vienna Exhibition, the SINGER received the Medal of Merit, the Medal of Progress, and three other Medals for superiority of productions. These are the highest Sewing Machine Awards at Vienna. The SINGER received all the medals awarded to either of the competing machines, and two medals more than any other obtained. Then, in the name of Truth, what is it that prompts people to claim recommendations for the Diploma of Honor? The fact is, no Diploma of Honor has been given to any Sewing Machine Company.

But immeasurably more valuable is The World's Award as shown by sales—proved by unpaid returns to the owners of the principal Sewing Machine Patents—which last year amounted to TWO HUNDRED AND SEVENTY THOUSAND, SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHT (270,758) machines, nine out of ten of them being for Family Use. This is over 45,000 more Sewing Machines than were sold by any other company during the same period, and over One Quarter of all the machines sold in 1872. These enormous sales are owing to the long-tested merits of the Singer Machines, which meet the wants of the public in versatility and simplicity of construction, and capability for great variety and excellence of work. That the users of Sewing Machines find these peculiar qualities in the Singer beyond all others, is shown by the sales above given, aside from the awards of International Juries, either at home or abroad.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, DROPSY AND HUMORS.

PERUVIAN SYRUP

Makes The Weak Strong.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, be easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quality of Nature's Great Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building upon an iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

EDMUND BURKE,

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA,
FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.
This compound of the vegetable alteratives, Sarsaparilla, Dock, Stillingia and Mandrake with the iodides of Potassium and Iron makes a most effectual cure of a series of complaints which are very prevalent and afflicting. It purifies the blood, purges out the lurking humors in the system that undermine health and settle into troublesome disorders. Eruptions of the skin are the appearance on the surface of humors that should be expelled from the blood. Internal derangements are the determination of these same humors to some internal organ, or organs, whose action they derange, and whose substance they disease and destroy. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA expels these humors from the blood. When they are gone, the disorders they produce disappear, such as Ulcerations of the Liver, Stomach, Kidney, Lungs, Eruptions and Eruptive Diseases of the Skin, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter and Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Ulcers and Sores, Rheumatism and Neuralgia, Pain in the Bones, Side and Head, Female Weakness, Sterility, Leucorrhœa arising from internal ulceration and uterine disease, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation and General Debility. With their departure, health returns.

Daily Chronicle.

Romance of a Rat.

The Covington Journal relates this touching tale:

Mr. Benjamin Taylor, of Taylor, Dunaway & Brothers, lumber merchants, on Eighth street, relates an incident of which he was an eye witness at his lumber yard, that strongly illustrates that universal feeling, mother-love, which so pervades all animal life.

In removing the last boards of a stack of planks, a rat's nest with nine young ones was found underneath. The little rodents were about the size of mice, and were able to crawl at a lively rate. An old-fashioned wire trap was procured, the young rats put into it, a weight put on the top, and it was left on the nest and watched. The trap was a semisphere, with a funnel-shaped entrance in the top and a lifting door in the side.

After waiting some half hour the mother rat made her appearance, showing evident anxiety about her litter. She hesitated some time before approaching the trap, but finally her affection prevailed, and she boldly ventured out, within twenty feet and in full view of the watchers. She ran several times around the prison that contained her young, tried the wires with her teeth, and made many demonstrations of solicitude and distress. At length finding that she could not get in to the young ones, she determined to bring them out to her. The manner in which she accomplished this showed something akin to that reason of which man is wont to boast that he is the only possessor. Placing herself close against the wires, she made a peculiar noise—a kind of gentle squeak—which immediately attracted the attention of her young and they came to the familiar call. First one little fellow put his nose between the wires, and being a little encouraged and helped by the mother, who pressed her own nose between the same wires, thus spread ing them a little wider apart, he squeezed his head through. In an instant she caught him by the neck, and in spite of his squalling and crying under the painful process, she pulled him forcibly through the wires and ran off with him under a pile of lumber near by. Probably a minute elasped before she reappeared, having deposited her rescued young one in safety. She was evidently encouraged by her success, and emboldened by the fact that she had not been molested, and proceeded to rescue one after another of her young, in the same manner, until she had taken out eight.

The watchers then half buried the trap in the loose dirt, and for a while the devoted mother was in great distress about how to get out the last of her litter. But she soon found that the little fellow couldn't reach her through the top, and she commenced digging down to him, throwing out the dirt eagerly as if incited to extra exertions by the lamentations of her young one. She burrowed just in front of the lifting door, on reaching which, she immediately entered, and to her surprise found herself a prisoner. She had sacrificed her own liberty to her mother-love, and, as the event proved, her life also, for she was killed, though her labors and courage in behalf of that feeling, which is instinct in all, and which is probably the most sacred impulse of the human heart, should have won mercy from her captors, and secured her from harm.

Changes of Fortune.

In an editorial article, the New York Times recounts the changes of fortune which have taken place among the "men of the street." Two months ago, in the view of the inexperienced, the great Philadelphia bankers were the leading national banking-house of the country. They had achieved an unexampled success in negotiating our national loans during the war, and had by their enterprise and skill not only enriched themselves, but done an invaluable service to the national cause. Had they been content with this honor, and with their ordinary business, they might have retired with each member of the firm possessed of millions. At one time a leading banking-house of Europe would have taken willingly part of the load from their shoulders, but Mr. Cooke's ambition led him to decline the offer. In perfectly fair weather and good times he might have carried the project through. But the financial storm came, and all his large enterprises were wrecked in a moment. Mr. Horace F. Clark's estate at his death was estimated to yield an income of a thousand dollars a day, and to be worth seven millions. Now it is believed to be worth absolutely nothing. Commodore Vanderbilt stood at the head of the stock operators of the Union, and controlled an enormous capital. His position now, if current rumors have any foundation, is most perilous and awkward. Whether he weather the storm or not, he has lost all prestige and influence, and his vast apparent wealth has melted like snow before the sun. He certainly has not as yet met his obligations, resting on no collateral securities, to the Union Trust Company. And many fear that his own tools and agents on the street will be left with loads of stock, to escape as they can. The retirement of Jay Gould is also announced. He has withdrawn from the presidency of the New Jersey Southern Railroad Company, and has also cancelled his special partnership with brokers' firms, in order to carry out his intention of retiring altogether from Wall street, at least for the present. Mr. Gould's health has become impaired, and it was deemed advisable to order a change of scene and climate. Says the Times: "After the Vanderbilts and Goulds and others have vanished from the exchange, with ruined fortunes and blackened reputations, other adventurers will appear, with new hope and courage, with more desperate schemes. Even the lesson of the currency will not be learned. Wisdom, at least in this matter, must wait to be justified of her children."

Readables.

Jay Gould's broker in London has disappeared with $700,000 of profit made on Erie stock, which he (Gould) was relying upon to offset the losses made here since the panic commenced.

In the Stokes case, important testimony for the defence has been introduced, a deputy sheriff who had custody of the hall boys during the first trial stating that the boys told him that they received $1000 for their trouble, and that their testimony was written out for them and committed to memory.

Certain New York detectives are charged with receiving and converting to their own use $50,000, obtained from the Bank of England forger, McDonnell, under a promise that they would get him out of his trouble.

The courts have decided that a man can pick all the fruit from his trees, though it hangs over a neighbor's land.

The boards of direction of nearly all the mills in Fall River have appointed a committee to confer with representatives of corporations in other places in regard to partial suspension during the present dull times.

Five armed men entered a dwelling-house near Catskill, N. Y., Sunday evening, put the family in irons and deliberately robbed the house.

The Baltimore American says that while the Democrats will probably have a majority in the next State Senate of Maryland, the Republican majority in the House will probably be large enough to secure, on joint ballot, the election of a Republican United States Senator in place of William T. Hamilton, whose term expires in March, 1875.

Cleveland, O., has just completed a tunnel into Lake Erie, a quarter of a mile long, for her water-works.

The American Abroad.

[M. D. Conway in Cin. Commercial.]

The London hotel-keeper or a tradesman has a voice and manner for Americans, another for the rest of the world, and I fear he has two sets of prices, also. A shopkeeper of long experience told me that he had, perhaps once or twice in his life, mistaken a Southern or Western man for an English provincial, but regarded his perception of a New Englander or a New Yorker or a Philadelphian as absolutely infallible. But to my questions concerning their peculiarities he could give no answer. Even long travel in Europe does not seem to obliterate them, however. The other day, I was travelling with an American who had been on this side of the Atlantic for eight or ten years, and whom I should not have taken for an American by his manner, voice, or pronunciation. But when we were with an English party, a bright, slender lady, who might well have been thought a Bostonian, remarked of something that "it must be worth $100." The American, hearing the word "dollars," instantly said, "What, are youan American?" "No," replied the lady, "but as you were I thought it best to put it in dollars." The gentleman was quite astonished as he had in no way disclosed his nationality, and fancied it unrecognized. In the case of the newly-arrived American, the difficulty of explaining the phenomenon is, of course, not great. The American physique is generally different from the English, the accent very different—the American usually giving an upward inflection at the end of a sentence when the English give a downward one. The English voice is more flat, more monotonous, and usually in a lower tone. But I cannot help thinking that the difference is generally permanent because it is more radical and blends with both the American character and with the circumstances amid which he is necessarily placed in a foreign land. As to these circumstances, they must give him a certain feeling of helplessness in the presence of a hotel-keeper or shopkeeper. He will meet their demand without surprise not knowing the standard of prices. When an Englishman would at least grumble at the stated price, or perhaps walk out indignantly, the American discloses his ignorance, and thereby his nationality, by continued affability even if he does not purchase. But still more, there are in the American certain traits which are unconscious and habitual. For one thing his sense of equality appears at every moment, and that in a region of snobs and in an atmosphere of servilities, constitutes a very important distinction. Every English shopkeeper is servile, and meets his customer as he would meet his master. He does not expect to be treated as a gentleman or an equal, and the American who speaks to him respectfully excites a momentary surprise. Again, the English always come bluntly to the point. No word ever passes between buyer and seller except such as is needed for the dry purpose of commercial barter. But the Americans—the ladies particularly,—will converse pleasantly with clerks and shop girls, as if the latter were human beings.

Washington Correspondence.

The President's Financial Views—Post-Office Savings Bank—Resumption—The Northern Pacific—A Big Shave—Evangelical Wine-Bibbers—A Theory as is a Theory.

The semi official announcement of the Presidential views on free banking, specie payments, post office savings banks and forbidding national banks from paying interest on deposits, are causing much discussion all over the country. There can be no question, that much of our financial troubles come from paying interest on deposits at the money centres, which in dull times causes country banks to send their surplus funds where it will earn something, upon call loans. When the country needs the money the speculators can't unload their stocks without loss, so they offer one, two, and three or more per cent. a month, to keep the money, and in consequence bankers send to country banks and money lenders lists of notes, and the discount at which they will be sold, rating from ten to twenty-five per cent., which are taken by national banks, savings banks, and money-lenders, and there is nothing left for honest business but to suffer extortionate rates or fail. Put a stop to banks paying interest on deposits and it would check immensely the speculations on call loans, which are the bane of honest business, and the cause largely, of the present panic.

The post office savings bank proposition is discussed in some quarters as though it was a dreadful thing. Stripped of all flummery it is a proposition to have the people loan in small sums to the government at four per cent. what rich people have been lending at six per cent., and what we paid the syndicate two per cent. to borrow for us in Europe at five. Some think it fearful that a million of poor people should lend the government a hundred million dollars at four per cent. when there are rich people enough to lend it at six, even if the people save two millions of interest and that interest was kept in the country instead of being sent out of it to European capitalists.

Specie payment comes in for discussion once more. Next to the potato rot it is the best discussed question of the age, and the one has been understood and discussed about as satisfactory as the other. There is but one way to specie payments, and that is to contract the amount of the currency. To do it suddenly is to take much money out of the poor man's pocket and put it in the rich man's pocket. It is coming gradually, as business and population increases, and currency is destroyed by fire and in other ways, unless the amount of currency is foolishly allowed to be increased. It may take several years to reach it without too much harm. A convertible and reconvertible bond would help it, because it would contract the currency when not wanted for use in business. Free banking, which seems now to be looked upon with favor, has some features of a convertible bond. The government has currency which the bank wants to borrow for nothing and it puts ten per cent. more government bonds with the government than it draws out currency. The difference between free banking borrowers of currency and a convertible and reconvertible bond borrower lies in this in part: The bank gets interest on its bonds while held as security for the currency, while in the other case there is no interest on the bond, while the government holds it. Why not let an individual have greenbacks for bonds as well as banks? And most especially when he is willing to go without interest on his bond—while the bank does not.

It is a month now since the financial panic came like a thunderbolt out of a comparatively clear sky. A great many were looking for it but not expecting it just then The crops were so good and the foreign demand so great, and the imports were so reduced, that most people were hopeful of tiding it over for another year. It is a matter of doubt whether it is all over, yet. There may be no more panic, but thousands who have been crippled will fail to pull through, who are now keeping up with hope. The blow came from a quarter familiar to some at least of your readers who are the victims of misplaced confidence in Northern Pacific Railroad after the repeated warnings and exposures of rottenness of that concern in the letters published in your columns last winter. That corporation intended to make a raid on Congress last winter for a governmental endorsement and guarantee of its bonds, but the Credit Mobilier investigation kept them off. They have been struggling to keep up till Congress came together to try their hand, the coming winter, but their prospects is darkened both by the failure of Jay Cooke and the political turn of events. Still you will see the attempt made. It is doubtful what the bonds will eventually be worth. It will be a long time before that part of the road built will pay running expenses, and though the lands are good to pay for the company's bonds, yet population will not hopefully seek a point where the thermometer gets down to fifteen above zero on the first day of October, when there is so much so good and so cheap land in warmer latitudes. Land in Maryland and Virginia is much cheaper than that at government prices. The failures which took place here have worked disastrously to the working people. They are getting certificates of indebtedness from the Board of Public Works for their labor, upon which, in getting the means to live they have to stand a shave of about fifty per cent. Every body here is expecting to see Uncle Sam assume the District debts. They bled him almost four millions in six weeks last year and he stood it so well that they will try and tap him again.

The Evangelical Alliance have been here and visited the President. They were made the guests of the District, and partook of a banquet provided by Gov. Shepard, at Willard's, where I hear they had four kinds of wine and the large majority of them partook of it freely. Dr. Arnot of Scotland in his speech alluded to one of the two glasses of wine near him, having a good deal of bead on it. Such a public example of wine drinking counteracts any good they might otherwise do. Dr. Allen at their last meeting preached a sermon on the labor question from a christian point of view. He criticised trades unions and the internationals, and came to the sage conclusion that it was hard for laborers to get more pay because it increased the price of the commodities they consumed. If he would only experiment in that way with his own pay to illustrate his position in practice who knows but what he would settle the vexed labor question? EXE.

Old Time Chronicles, No 90.

BY UNCLE JOSEPH.

Old almanacs are interesting. Some account of them comes in well in our "Old Time Chronicles." They are old time chronicles in reality. They contain an account of some of the movements and phases of the planetary worlds and other heavenly bodies, a chronicle of some of the important events of the times for which they were published, and counsels of wisdom and advice to all.

In a late number, an almanac for 1767 was noticed. It was by Nathaniel Low of Berwick, Me., and printed in Portsmouth An obliging friend, Mr. Horatio G. Brown of Portsmouth, has favored us with one for 1777 by the same Mr. Low, and to it is stitched another for the same year, called "Bickerstaff's Boston Almanack." It was customary then to have "k" on the end of the last syllable.

It seems that astronomical calculations were not in all cases as accurate then as now. Mr. Low was a practical astronomer. There was to be a visible eclipse of the sun, Jan. 9th of that year. Mr. Low said six digits would be eclipsed. That was just half of the sun's surface. But on the title page he has a diagram of the eclipse, and in that considerably less than one-half of the sun is represented as darkened. Bickenstaff says seven and nine-tenths digits would be eclipsed. This was within a small portion of two-thirds of the sun's disk. Both almanacs were calculated for the meridian of Boston, and yet they disagree as to the precise time of the eclipse. Low says it would commence at 8.37 A. M.—Bickerstaff fifty-five minutes later. About the same discrepancies appear as to the middle and the end. Low says the duration would be two hours and 25 minutes; Bickerstaff two hours and 53 minutes. So far as our knowledge goes Low was much the nearer correct.

The war of the Revolution was going on and both of these almanacs were loyal to our country's cause. On the third page of Low's is a rough picture of the seat of war near New York city. Then there are pages addressed to the Tories. The language is plain, sensible and scathing. Then much of the poetry at the head of the pages is in condemnation of tyrants and for civil freedom. We copy that for March:

"All sovereign power belongs to God alone;
Therefore no man of right can claim a throne.
We know no sov'reign but the Lord on high.
Free born we are, and free we'll live or die.
Britain adieu! we seek your aid no more,
Nor call you mother as we did before."

The Declaration of Independence was declared a few months before these almanacs went to press. On the third page of Bickerstaff's is "The character of a Patriot." His excellences are set forth in a just manner, and in conclusion it is said, that neither Milton in painting his lovely paradise, nor Newton in discovering the grand laws of nature, felt pleasures more intellectual or joys more sublime. In the midst of this description is a picture of John Hancock, President of the Continental Congress. So he was evidently the patriot meant.

Bickerstaff's miscellaneous matter is not much. The lines at the head of the calendar pages are not very suggestive, and rather poor poetry. It is probable that Bickerstaff was not the real name of the author. The public had doubted this in the previous publications. On the second page he notices this, and complains good naturedly of the attempt to deprive him of being and reducing him to nonentity, but he does not plainly deny that Bickerstaff is an assumed, or fictitious name.

Narrow Escape from Death in a Bank Vault.

[Detroit Free Press.]

A singular accident occurred at a Griswold-street banking-house, Saturday noon, by which one of the employes of the establishment came near losing his life through suffocation. It appears that the gentleman who was the sufferer had occasion to enter the inner chamber of the vault about fifteen minutes before the hour for closing the bank had arrived, when an assistant in the cash department, who has charge of the keys, came along, and without even as much as looking into the vault (thereby neglecting to turn off the gas, which is kept burning during business hours), carelessly slammed the inner door and locked it. Unconscious of the fact that he had imprisoned a human being, he forced the massive outer door of the vault into position, turned the key, and depositing it in his pocket, took his customary station at the desk. In the business routine of this establishment the day-books are regularly posted before closing, in order that no interruption may occur on re-opening for the afternoon's transactions, and the involuntary prisoner, who superintends this department, not being present to give the usual orders, an inquiry was raised as to what had become of him. After a few moments' patient waiting it was decided to send for him, and with this view a messenger boy was dispatched to hunt him up. The boy soon returned, saying that he had made a diligent search, but without result. As the man's hat and coat were hanging on the rack, it was apparent that he could not have gone far, and it was decided to wait for him until twelve o'clock before closing the books. The City Hall bell soon tolled that hour, and the gentlemen engaged in the bank prepared to go to dinner, leaving one of their number at the door in charge of the missing man's clothing.

In going out the teller said in a joking manner that their colleague had been imprisoned in the vault. This caused the gentleman who closed it so much uneasiness that he decided, notwithstanding the burst of laughter which his undertaking might create, to swing both doors of the vault and walk in. This was immediately done, when, to the horror of those outside, he uttered a shriek and called for assistance. To rush into the vault and turn on the gas, which had become extinguished, was but the work of an instant, when the prostrate form of the poor fellow was discovered in a position which revealed his sufferings, and showed how hard he had struggled to regain his liberty. The apparently lifeless body was carried out of the vault and placed on a sofa in the directors' parlor. Several physicians were immediately summoned, who, aided by the bank employes, made every possible effort to resuscitate him.

After a half-hour's assiduous labor, during which time proper restoratives were applied, they were rewarded by perceiving unmistakable symptoms of the return of animation. Under advice of the attending physicians, he was placed in a carriage and conveyed to his home, where he shortly afterward returned to consciousness. Although very weak from the effects of his imprisonment, the care and treatment which he is receiving will soon enable him to return to his post. He states that when the doors were locked on him he cried at the top of his voice, with but a faint hope of being heard outside. He shook the inner door until it rattled on its hinges, but all in vain; and after having resorted to every means in his power to liberate himself from his tomb, exhausted by exertion and stifled by the close air of the vault, he fell helplessly to the stone floor to meet his seemingly inevitable doom. He soon after became insensible, and but for the timely discovery of his whereabouts he must have perished.

A female cat, owned by the proprietor of the Sparks Hotel, in Nicholasville, Ky., recently brought a mixed family into the world. She gave birth at one and the same time to three kittens and to three animals which, to all outward appearances, are common gray squirrels. It is stated that the female cat formed an intimacy with a number of gray squirrels which frequented the yard where she made her home.

A Disabling Disease.

No disease which does not confine a man to his bed so completely unfits him for business as dyspepsia. When the stomach is foul, the brain is always muddy and confused, and as the cares and anxieties of life are a sufficient burden for the organ of thought to bear, without being tormented by the miseries born of indigestion, it is highly desirable for the man's sake, as well as for the sake of every other portion of the system, that the disordered stomach should be restored with the utmost dispatch to a healthy, vigorous condition. This object can always be accomplished by a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the purest and best of vegetable specifics, which evacuates the morbid humors through the bowels, rouses and tones the torpid stomachs and regulates the liver, imparts firmness to the nerves and clears the sensorium of its mental cobwebs. Persons subject to attacks of indigestion, bilious headache, irregularity of the bowels, sickness at the stomach, or "the blues," should take the Bitters once or twice a day throughout the present season.

A TRIUMPH OF MEDICAL ART.

Yes, a triumph we call it, when medicine can be so "fixed up" as to be pleasant to take and yet accomplish the object intended. Such a medicine is Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets, samples of which the writer procured and tested in his own family. The Pellets (little pills) are about one-fifth the size of an ordinary pill, made of highly concentrated root and herbal extracts, and sugar-coated.—Frankfort (Ind.) Weekly Crescent. 7o1.

Proposed New Road to Rye.

One "Squibo" undertook in your paper to ridicule the people of Rye and the proposed new road, and to inform the petitioners what they wanted. He has exhibited his total ignorance of the town and Rye Centre. The new route, if opened, would bring more than 125 dwelling houses in Rye about seven-eighths of a mile nearer by the Lafayette road to Portsmouth. He writes: "There are more stores to a foot in the road than at any other place in the State." There have been two stores near the meeting houses for 75 years, and no more. A road from Straw's Point, where there are only three residents and half a dozen summer houses, would be no accommodation to the petitioners for the new road. No one wants to go to Straw's Point to get to Portsmouth. One might as well talk of going to Greenland from Rye to go over the Greenland road to Portsmouth. The petitioners know where a road would accommodate them and be a public benefit. Is it no accommodation to have a road with snow on it in sleighing time instead of dragging over bare ground as is often the case from Rand's store to Lafayette road when the sleighing is good the rest of the way to Portsmouth? Besides being a very cold, bleak road in winter, both of which would be obviated by the opening of the route petitioned for. A road over the route proposed would yearly save tens of thousands of miles travel and be more level and comfortable both summer and winter for the PUBLIC.

There are 252 actions on the civil docket, 65 equity, 12 sessions, and seventeen State actions. This week is assigned for the disposition of cases on the equity docket, and no petit jurors are in attendance. Divorces were decreed as follows: Jessie Spinney from Moses J. Spinney, John Q. A. Kelly from Sarah C. Kelly.

The tempting cart-loads of potatoes and rosy-cheeked apples that pass our office give token that the harvest is ready and abundant.

The Board of Mayor and Aldermen, at a special meeting, Tuesday afternoon, voted unanimously not to lay out a new highway from Squirrel hill to Rye Centre.

The Catholic Fair at St Mary's Church was well attended last evening and a large variety of articles were temptingly displayed. It will continue through this week.

The heavy southerly storm just closed was one of the most violent of gales for this season of the year. A great amount of rain fell and the damage must have been great along the coast.

A committee from Malden, Mass., with Hon. Ezra A. Stevens as chairman, visited this city on Tuesday, for the purpose of persuading Rev. Carlos Martyn to accept the urgent call to transfer his pastorial duties to that place.

The Newburyport Herald says the arrangements of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal and Iron Company for landing and storing coal at Portsmouth are at a stand still. It was intended to begin operations in September and have the work finished before winter, but there is a prospect of a marginal railway, which, if had, will lead to a change of location in the company's wharf and depot, and this will be decided so late in the season that nothing will be done until the opening of spring.

Temperance Proposition No. 3.

Those harsh sounding chords, "Every tub on its own bottom," "Every man for himself," with their logical sequence, "Hell for us all," which have from early barbarous times been the keynote in much of the music of the world's operations, the events now current show to be merging into the better harmonies of a communism in regard to all earthly interests, while the individuality of the soul before God and as regards its immortal interests shall be fully maintained. Such a communism is the only basis of hope for the Temperance Reformers and all the friends of virtue. Single handedness in our attempt is the secret of our wide-spread failures. Governments in their criminal departments of administration will become so perfected that they will do nothing merely to punish the drunkard but will treat him for reformation and hold him until this result is completely attained. In individuals we shall have instead of base flatterics the rebuke in love; we shall have a watchful, sympathetic care, demonstrative of the glorious fact that every person is a keeper of the welfare of every other. Thus crimes will be abolished and errors corrected. HARD PAN.

of every speech that was uttered at the Tent on the 4th and 5th, besides giving a full report of all the Reunion preliminary movements in Portsmouth, Boston and New York. Much of the matter of this work has never yet appeared in any form, and we think it will prove interesting to all who participated in the

The Singer Still Triumphant!

At the Vienna Exhibition, the SINGER received the Medal of Merit, the Medal of Progress, and three other Medals for superiority of productions. These are the highest Sewing Machine Awards at Vienna. The SINGER received all the medals awarded to either of the competing machines, and two medals more than any other obtained. Then, in the name of Truth, what is it that prompts people to claim recommendations for the Diploma of Honor? The fact is, no Diploma of Honor has been given to any Sewing Machine Company.

But immeasurably more valuable is The World's Award as shown by sales—proved by sworn returns to the owners of the principal Sewing Machine Patents—which last year amounted to TWO HUNDRED AND NINETEEN THOUSAND, SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHT (219,758) machines, nine out of ten of them being for Family Use. This is over 45,000 more Sewing Machines than were sold by any other company during the same period, and over One Quarter of all the machines sold in 1872. These enormous sales are owing to the long-tested merits of the Singer Machines, which meet the wants of the public in variety and simplicity of construction, and capability for great variety and excellence of work. That the users of Sewing Machines find these desirable qualities in the singer, is evident from the fact, as shown by the sales above given, aside from the awards of International Juries, either at home or abroad.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, DROPSY AND HUMORS.

PERUVIAN SYRUP

Makes The Weak Strong.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an alkaret, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures a thousand ills, simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the system. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Humors, Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building upon an iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY!

CONSUMPTION!

And acknowledged by many prominent physicians to be the most Reliable Preparation ever introduced for the RELIEF and CURE of all

LUNG COMPLAINTS.

This well known remedy is offered to the public, sanctioned by the experience of over forty years, and when resorted to in season seldom fails to effect a speedy cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, CROUP, BRONCHITIS, INFLUENZA, WHOOPING COUGH, HOARSENESS, PAINS OR SORENESS IN THE CHEST OR SIDE, BLEEDING AT THE LUNGS, LIVER COMPLAINTS, &c.

CONSUMPTION

CURED

By a timely resort to this standard remedy, as is proved by hundreds of testimonials received by the proprietors.

Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry

Does not dry up a Cough and leave the cause behind as is the case with most Preparations, but it loosens and cleanses the lungs and allays irritation, thus removing the cause of the complaint.

CLERGYMEN, LAWYERS, SINGERS,

And all those whose occupation requires an unusual exercise of the vocal organs, will find this the ONLY PREPARATION which will effectually and instantaneously relieve their difficulties.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS.—Remember that the genuine Wistar's Balsam has on the outside wrapper the signature of "I. BUTTS," and the printed name of the proprietors, "SETH W. FOWLE & SONS, BOSTON." All others are base imitations. Examine the wrapper carefully before purchasing.

$1 PER BOTTLE. SIX BOTTLES, $5.

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA,
FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.
This compound of the vegetable alteratives, Sarsaparilla, Dock, Stillingia and Mandrake with the Iodides of Potassium and Iron makes a most effectual cure of a series of complaints which are very prevalent and afflicting. It purifies the blood, purges out the lurking humors in the system that undermine health and settle into troublesome disorders. Eruptions of the skin are the appearance on the surface of humors that should be expelled from the blood. Internal derangements are the determination of these same humors to some internal organ, or organs, whose action they derange, and whose substance they disease and destroy. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA expels these humors from the blood. When they are gone, the disorders they produce disappear, such as Ulcerations of the Liver, Stomach, Kidney, Lungs, Eruptions and Eruptive Diseases of the Skin, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter and Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Ulcers and Sores, Rheumatism and Neuralgia, Pain in the Bones, Side and Head, Female Weakness, Sterility, Leucorrhœa arising from internal ulceration and uterine disease, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation and General Debility. With their departure, health returns.

An Exciting Game Contest.
[Turf, Field and Farm.]

"Nomad," a real sporting correspondent of the New York Turf, Field and Farm, (the best of all the sporting papers in the country, by the way,) writing from Dakota Territory, gives us his score in that vicinity, on a three months' trip near the Yellowstone, Mussel Shell and Missouri rivers:—41 antelope, 4 elk, 3 buffalo, 4 black-tail deer, 2 white wolf, 1 red fox, 1 porcupine, 3 wildcat; and geese, ducks, prairie chickens and sage hens without number. He asks who can beat this.

He states, "My score was made with a Remington hunting rifle, calibre, 50; cartridges containing 70 grains of powder. I seldom killed at a less distance than 150 yards, running up from that distance to 630 yards, at which range I shot a fine buck antelope just nine days ago. The average distance at which I killed the 41 antelopes exceeds 250 yards. I usually measured the range after each successful shot. I only brought down single animals, and did not fire into herds. I might have greatly increased my score by including game which I only assisted in killing."

The antelopes, buffaloes, black-tail deer and white wolves were brought down by my rifle, and without the assistance of other hunters. The fox I caught with Scotch stag-hounds. The porcupine I caught alive by hand, or, rather, by throwing a blanket over it. Two of the wild cats were killed outright; the third was taken alive, and with the porcupine now constitutes a portion of the animal kingdom with which I have surrounded myself. As I write these lines, in the wee sma' hours of the night, I can hear the porcupine gnawing vigorously in the endeavor to make his way through the large box in which I keep him confined in the rear of my tent; while as an occasional passer by in front of my tent stumbles, in the darkness, near a box of smaller dimensions, I can hear the low, determined growl of his or her feline highness, the wild cat.

Fortunately I am no somnambulist, or I might, in my midnight wanderings, furnish a supper for this domestic menagerie. I suppose you, or the reader wonder what on earth any sane man wants with a wild-cat on one side of him and a porcupine on the other. Well, what I particularly want with reference to these two amiable specimens of the animal kingdom, is to be let alone until the first favorable opportunity occurs to reach the station of the Northern Pacific Railroad, just across the river, when I propose to label them properly, and send them, per Adams Express, to Central Park, there to join company with the cinnamon bear I forwarded some time ago, and to gratify the curiosity of the youthful metropolitans.

The porcupine and cat story has proved a digression. The largest of the tour elk included in my score measured over fifteen hands in height, eleven feet and a half from point of the nose to hind heels, as he lay naturally on the ground after being killed, and when dressed his estimated weight was eight hundred pounds. I preserved his skin entire, from his antlers to and including his hoofs. His antlers are the handsomest I ever saw. I propose shipping him, in a few days, to the Audubon Club, Detroit, to be mounted and setup in the rooms, the King of the Forest, for such was the appellation bestowed upon the magnificent elk of which I write. And with a hunter's pride will I ask you to glance at the long, deep scars on the ears and sides, while I recount how, after being wounded by my rifle and pursued by my noble stag-hounds, the elk was forced to leap into the river, followed by the dogs—the same dogs who, as I write, are gathered near my camp-stool, some hugging the fire, others at my feet; while Maids, my favorite, has exercised her prerogative and stretched herself at full length on the buffalo covering of my camp-bed.

The combat in the water was one of the finest and most exciting hunting scenes I ever witnessed. As I stood on the bank, rifle in hand, and within twenty paces of the quarry, I trembled for the lives of my brave dogs. The water was of such depth as enabled the elk to stand on terra firma, while the dogs were compelled to swim in order to reach him. Nothing daunted, however, on they plunged; and, like a charge of well-drilled cavalrymen, they dashed at the huge buck as if their battle-cry had been, "Up, dogs, and at him!" In vain did the elk make his way, always fighting, to where the water was deeper, almost covering his back. It only enabled his shaggy but silent foes to attack him at greater advantage, for see! First Blucher, then Cardigan, leap from the water and clamber upon his back. What can be their object, as they endeavor to balance themselves upon the back of the now thoroughly infuriated animal—infuriated because the comrades of Blucher and Cardigan are pressing their attacks, front and rear, so that no time can be spared from them to devote elsewhere.

Look at Blucher, as like an expert and daring rope-walker, he eagerly and steadily makes his way towards the head. He has gone as far as he can, but still his aim is unaccomplished. I have it! Faithful and determined to the last, his favorite, in fact his only hold when contending with smaller game is the ear, and it is to secure this hold now that he is struggling. Watching his opportunity, when the elk has thrown his head back to avoid the teeth of those dogs swimming in his front, Blucher makes a half plunge or spring, and his large, powerful jaws close like a huge vice upon the ear of the elk, thus to remain until either the one or the other is vanquished. The struggle now became desperate in the extreme. The elk devoted his entire efforts to freeing himself from the fangs of the dog. At last, becoming maddened with pain, he, as a last resort, would plunge his entire head and neck deep down into the water, in his fruitless efforts to force the dog to release his hold.

One moment I would see the head and neck of the buck thrown erect, high in the air, Blucher clinging grimly to the ear; the next, antlers, head, neck and dog would descend into the water, and disappear until I thought both animals must surely drown. Cardigan all this time was far from idle. Watching this conflict, and each moment becoming more anxious and excited for the safety of my dogs, I scarcely knew what I was doing or where I was. I called wildly to the dogs to come away—almost beseeched them as if they were human, and understood my every word. "You'll all be killed!" "you'll all be killed!" was my oft-repeated exclamation, as I saw elk and dogs all floundering and fighting in the water.

I kept my rifle in my hand all the time, and would have terminated the combat long before, but that the rapid movements of the dogs prevented me from firing at the elk without endangering their lives. Finally, I was forced to choose between the risk of firing and that of having one or more of the dogs killed or drowned by the buck. The latter seemed the most to be dreaded, so bringing my rifle to my shoulder and running my eye along the barrel, I waited for a time when I could send a shot through a vital part. Presently it came; the loin was uncovered for an instant. Quick and sharp rang the report of my rifle, and at the same instant the immense body of the elk sank slowly down in the water, and the battle was over.

Oh! for a Landseer to have grasped and preserved the exciting features of that combat. It was some two miles from camp. I sent for a wagon and men to transport the elk to camp. Without mutilating him in the least, he was carried and deposited on the green grass in front of my tent. Fortunately, among the other representatives of science who accompanied the party under the auspices of the government, was an experienced photographer, with complete apparatus, &c., for taking hunting pictures. In a few moments everything was ready. The elk looked as natural as if enjoying a quiet slumber. Seated on the ground by his side, with a rifle thrown carelessly across his knee, while one hand rested on the antlers of the elk, was "Nomad." A splendid negative was obtained, from which prints will be made after the arrival of the plate in Washington, D. C., when I hope to inclose a proof to the Turf, Field and Farm as confirmatory evidence of the truth of this story.

The Stokes Trial.

On Tuesday, the following testimony for the defence was put in:

Adeline Barker, a respectable-looking old lady, called at the rooms of the Morse ladies; saw a gentleman whom she did not know until she heard him say to one of the young ladies with whom he was conversing: "I'll send him to a higher court than he ever was in, the cur; I'll shoot him as sure as my name is Jim Fisk." The young lady said: "Oh, don't shoot him, or the gallows may be your end!" He replied: "I'll shoot him! I'll wipe him out! There never was a gallows made for Jim Fisk."

On cross-examination, witness stated that Fisk kissed both young ladies as soon as he arrived. This circumstance attracted the attention of the witness. When Fisk sat down the ladies asked what detained him; he said Stokes' prosecution, but he would wipe him out. He said, "I am prepared for him." One of the young ladies said, "Oh, you are jealous of the loss of beauty." In the examination by Mr. Tremaine, witness added that when Fisk said "I am prepared for him," he put his hand behind him; he also said: "I have a little rascal here."

James S. Byrnes, another new witness, testified: Heard Fisk, who was conversing with some gentlemen, mention the name of Stokes and say: "I've got all the money he had out of him, and I'll wipe him out—there won't be a grease-spot left of him." Witness communicated this to Stokes the next morning. On another occasion witness heard Stokes say at the Hoffman House that he was afraid of his life.

Mary Dean testified: Was passing the Grand Central Hotel the 6th of January, 1872, and saw Fisk go in by the ladies, entrance; came back to the door, drew [a] pistol in great rage and went in again, when there were two shots. Witness was put through a severe cross-examination by the district attorney, but her evidence was not shaken materially.

—An urchin of seven years went into a barber shop, and ordered the barber to cut his hair as short as shears could do it. He was asked if his mother ordered it in that way. "No," said he "school commences next week, and we have got a school ma'am that pulls hair."

—A cowardly fellow having kicked a newsboy for pestering him to buy an evening paper, the lad waited till another boy accosted the "gentleman," and then shouted in the hearing of all by-standers: "It's no use to try him, Jim, he can't read."

—A patertamilias with a fashionable wife and three or four ditto daughters thus feelingly describes full dress: "Full dress is where the wearer puts one-third of her dress on her person, and drags two-thirds on the ground."

The London Lancet says: "We hear that a club has been formed at Hamburg for promoting the heathen practice of incineration in place of Christian orthodox inhumation. The club, it is said, already numbers upwards of eighty members, each of whom on entering has made a will, according to which his remains are to be burnt. The only difficulty about this proceeding is the cost of the fuel. The wood and coal required for the satisfactory destruction of a human body would certainly be considerable, and the present scarcely seems a favorable time for reviving this ancient and in a sanitary point of view, commendable practice.

A second Methusalah is said to have been discovered in Brazil. He is one hundred and seventy-nine years of age, and speaks of happenings a century and a half ago. He reads the news from Spain with great interest, and urges some of his children, grand-children and great-grand-children, of whom he has 214, to enlist in the Spanish army and honor their old sire.

A recent discussion of the murder law of Maine brings to light the fact that under the law of 1869 the governor and council are constituted a court of review in capital cases. Just before the expiration of the year of the sentence the governor submits the case with the evidence to the council, and if they, after a careful review, vote that the sentence shall stand, the governor issues his warrant for the execution; if they vote for commutation, he issues an order to that effect. In every case but one, since 1869, the council have voted to commute, and their action has in each case been accepted by the governor. This law seems to be peculiar to the State, and the opinion prevails that the legislative rather than the executive department should assume this duty.

In this selfish, material and money-changing age it is rare that we come upon an exhibition of that heroic spirit which makes martyrdom possible. But that virtue was exemplified in the death of one James Marr, a seaman who was lately swept overboard from a pilot schooner in Australian waters. The same wave that bore him from the vessel's deck carried with it the mainmast also; and the brave fellow, seeing the ship's danger, motioned to his comrades to cut away the mast and save themselves, knowing, of course, that in doing so they sent him to certain destruction. "We bade him good-bye," the mate of the wrecked schooner simply records, "and he nodded to us." How seldom do the last acts of the world's greatest men equal the nobleness of that poor sailor's nod!

The Atlantic "Westerly Current."

Mr. Coxwell, the well-known English aeronaut, made an ascent on September 29, in the celebrated Nassau balloon, with the view of taking observations on the westerly current which was to have taken over to England the Atlantic balloon, but didn't. He went up to a height of 10,000 feet, and descended at nightfall near Box Hill, Surrey, being due south of the Alexandra Palace, whence he ascended. The course of the balloon was from north to south, and not from west to east. "The light cloudy streamers very far above us," says Mr. Coxwell, "were drifting in a similar direction, thus proving that, at least on that day, the movement of the upper atmosphere was from pole to pole."

New Publications.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY for November begins a new volume. Edward King's profusely illustrated paper on Old and New Louisiana, in the great South Series, is remarkable for its calm and dispassionate statement of the actual state of affairs in New Orleans and Louisiana generally. Two American serial stories are begun: Katherine Earle, by Adeline Trafton (author of "The American Girl Abroad,") to run through the year, and the other, "Earthern Pitchers," by Rebecca Harding Davis, which will be concluded within three or four numbers. Mr. Froude's historical sketch of an "English Abbey," is also begun; and in Stedman's series on the "Victorian Poets," there is an admirable paper on the "most inspired of women," Elizabeth Barrett Browning. In the same number appears a biographical sketch of Stedman, by A. E. MacDonough, with portrait, in the series of Younger American Authors. Professor Newcomb gives an interesting account of the making of the new great telescope at Washington; there is an illustrated story by Edward King, "Only Half a Woman," a story by Louise Chandler Moulton, "For Pastime;" and verse by George MacDonald, Celia Thaxter, H. H., Margaret J. Preston, and Richard Watson Gilder. Dr. Holland's Topics of the Time are "A Greeting to our English Readers," "St. Nicholas," "The New York Observer," and "Old Types."

SCRIBNER'S for December will have a new dialect poem by Bret Harte; and to the January number he will contribute a Christmas story, entitled "How Old Man Plunkett went Home."

Fight with a Devil Fish.

Mr. Charles B. Brainerd of Boston, in writing to the Scientific American about specimens of the devil fish, relates this interesting incident:

"The strength which these creatures possess is almost beyond comprehension, as is evinced by what took place when my pet (?) was captured. He had seized hold of a sub-marine diver, at work in the wreck of a sunken steamer off the coast of Florida. The man was a powerful Irishman who claimed to weigh three hundred pounds. His size and build fully verified this statement, and, to use his own language, "the baste landed on the top of my shoulders and pinned my arms tight. I felt my armor and myself being cracked into a jelly." It seems that he was just about being brought to the surface, else the monster would have killed him, for he was suffering so from the terrible embrace that he could move no part of himself. When dragged on to the raft from which he had descended, he had fainted. The men on the raft seized the fish by one of its wriggling arms and tried to pull it off but could not break the power of a single one of the suckers. The fish was only removed by being dealt a heavy blow across the sack containing the stomach. This sack stood stiffly up above the eyes, while the eyes stood out like lobsters' eyes and gleamed like fire."

A Big Blow.

Last evening, while the chief engineer of a lung-tester was expatiating upon the benefits to be derived from the free use of his instruments, a cadaverous individual stepped out of the crowd and remarked to him:

"Mister, do you think it would help me any to blow into that can?"

"Yes, sir; certainly; it would expand your chest, give elasticity to your lungs, and lengthen your life. Why, you'd soon be able to blow 500 pounds and win the $5 prize."

"Why, does a fellow get $5 when he blows that many pounds?"

"Yes, sir; wouldn't you like to make a trial?" with a knowing wink to the crowd.

"I don't care if I do," said Greens, walking around and planking down a dime of the greasy shinplaster sort.

Then taking the mouth piece in his hand, he made ready. He opened his mouth until the hole in his face looked like a dry dock for ocean steamers, and began to take in wind. The inflation was like that of the Graphic balloon, but not so disastrous. That fellow's chest began to grow until he resembled a pouter pigeon more than a man, at which point he put the mouth piece to his lips and blew with such force that his eyes came out and stood around on his cheek bones to see what was the matter—but that can-top went up like a flash, and the needle of the indicator spun around like the button on a country school house door, until it stood at 500 pounds! The crowd cheered, and the keeper of the can paid over the $5 in stamps, with a mutter of astonishment. But Greens pocketed them coolly, and turning to the spectators, said:

"Look here, gents, that ain't nothing to do at all for a man who has been a bugler in a deaf and dumb asylum for seven years, like me!"

A most ingenious device for carrying on a clandestine courtship was brought to light by a grape-skin, Friday evening. The young lady lives with her parents and brother on Pine street. The young man whom she favored is a trifle obnoxious to the rest of the family, and it has been their aim to keep him at a distance. As he had not been to the house for some time, and she had not been discovered with him on the street, the family flattered themselves that the ill-starred match was broken up. On Friday evening the brother arrayed himself in his best suit and went down street. An hour later, while passing along the dark side of the street, he encountered the objectionable suitor engaged in close conversation with another man. Not wishing to notice him he lifted his eyes above the level of the other party's head, and was preparing to sail by with an unconscious demeanor, when he unfortunately stepped upon the skin of a grape, and losing his balance, shot violently into the strange gentleman's legs, bringing him down upon himself. The young man's embarrassment was changed to horror and astonishment when the stranger cried out in the voice of his sister: "O, Tom, how could you?" He sprang to his feet in an instant. The stranger was also getting up, and presented an almost remarkable appearance. His face was almost as red as scarlet, and his glossy moustache was turned half way around, one-half lying across his mouth, and the other half hugging the lee side of his nose. "Why, Mary?" exclaimed the shocked brother. But Mary said nothing and held her head, while her lover made himself scarce. The brother took the sister home, and her mother escorted her to her room, where she was at once undressed and put to bed, with hot bricks to her feet and a quart of hot boneset down her throat. The mother, who could not believe ill of her daughter, declared it was a case of bilious fever, and determined to get the best of it. The lover has secured work in New Haven for the winter.

Extraordinary Scene at a Wreck.

A correspondent, describing the wreck of the steamer Agra, off Galle, bound from Calcutta to London, via the Suez Canal, says that after the vessel struck on the rocks the passengers and crew had barely time to escape into the boats, as the seas came tumbling over the sides, sweeping everything before them, carrying away one poor invalid sailor, and bursting open the cages and dens of an extensive menagerie on board going home for the Zoological Gardens. The escape and striking out amid the waves of a crowd of tigers, elephants, &c., and their roars and screams adding to the terror of the wretched passengers, presented a spectacle that will not soon be forgotten. One elephant managed to swim ashore, as did one of the inhabitants of the adjacent coast.

—A contemporary says of a very prominent militia general, that "his sword was never drawn but once—and then in a raffle."

—Interesting to bachelors: A number of caterers in different parts of the city advertise, "Families supplied by the quart!"

—A drunken Toledo man wrote on the wall of his cell: "Jug not that ye be not jugged."

—It takes two boys to go to school now-a-days—one to study and the other to carry the books.

—A genius is popularly supposed to be one who can do anything except make a living.

Business Notices.

For Catarrh the only substantial benefit can be obtained through the blood. VEGETINE is the great blood purifier.

Important to Sufferers.—The greatest benefactor is one who relieves pain and cures disease. DR. SILSBEE has accomplished both by his miraculous discovery of ANAKESIS, an absolutely easy, rapid and infallible cure for PILES in all stages. All Doctors endorse it and 20,000 cured sufferers testify to its virtues. It is a simple suppository acting as an instrument, poultice and medicine. The relief is instant and cure certain. Price $1.00. Sent free by mail on receipt of price, Anakesis Depot, 46 Walker St., New York.

A Disabling Disease.

No disease which does not confine a man to his bed so completely unfits him for business as dyspepsia. When the stomach is foul, the brain is always muddy and confused, and as the cares and anxieties of life are a sufficient burden for the organ of thought to bear, without being tormented by the miseries born of indigestion, it is highly desirable for the brain's sake, as well as for the sake of every other portion of the system, that the disordered stomach should be restored with the utmost dispatch to a healthy, vigorous condition. This object can always be accomplished by a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the purest and best of vegetable specifics, which evacuates the morbid humors through the bowels, rouses and tones the torpid stomachs and regulates the liver, imparts firmness to the nerves and clears the sensorium of its mental cobwebs. Persons subject to attacks of indigestion, billious headache, irregularity of the bowels, sickness at the stomach, or "the blues," should take the Bitters once or twice a day throughout the present season.

A TRIUMPH OF MEDICAL ART.

Yes, a triumph we call it, when medicine can be so "fixed up" as to be pleasant to take and yet accomplish the object intended. Such a medicine is Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets, samples of which the writer procured and tested in his own family. The Pellets (little pills) are about one-fifth the size of an ordinary pill, made of highly concentrated root and herbal extracts, and sugar-coated.—Frankfort, (Ind.) Weekly Crescent. 7d1

Local Matters.

Fair at the Catholic Church.

The Fair at St. Mary's Church is a great success, the receipts for Monday and Tuesday nights exceeding $500. A number of valuable presents have been sent in since the opening. Mrs. Richard Jenness donated an elegant jewelry case, inlaid with gold. A beautifully gold embroidered altar Burse was sent from Washington to Mrs. Kimball of this city, who is a liberal patron of the Fair. Sheldon Bros. sent in a nice embroidered chair; Mr. Burleigh on Congress street a fine picture of the Crucifixion. Messrs. Norton, Garrity and C. C. Akerman contributed handsome presents. The voting on those articles that are to be disposed of by allowing them to the party receiving the highest number of votes will commence this evening and continue the two following evenings.

The anxiety of the ladies to possess the beautiful gold chain and cross is amusing, although not surprising. An elegant ladies' gold watch is also the attraction of the younger feminines, who manifest a degree of ardor in voting that would indicate their fitness for the exercise of the right of suffrage.

The stock of ice cream and oysters was exhausted on Tuesday evening before the wants of the crowd were near supplied.

S. J. Court.

On Wednesday, in the action, Town of Rockport vs. Richard Walden, Executor of William B. Russell, which is a suit in equity to recover the amount of a judgment rendered in 1849, a partial hearing was had before the court, and the case postponed until Thursday. W. H. Hackett for Plf.

Mary M. Wiggin et al, vs. Swamscott Machine Co., with the dividends due thereon. Hearing commenced and continued until the afternoon, when an agreement for settlement of the suit was filed.

Divorces decreed: Charles E. Preble (of Newton) from Hannah M. Preble; Lavina Garland (of Newmarket) from George F. Garland; Emma F. Bailey (of Portsmouth) from John Henry Bailey, 2d.

Laconics.

It took ten minutes to divorce a couple at the S. J. Court on the 21st.

The Lelap boat club of this city went to Exeter, Wednesday to witness the regatta of the Phillips Academy students. Arrangements were made by the Exeter boys to row a race with the Lelaps after they arrived. The students entered the four-oared shell "Grace," with Mr. Hall (a Harvard oar man, who pulled in the freshman race last year) as stroke. The Grace had the advantage at the start, but the Lelaps by good rowing closed the gap, passed, and won the race by a length and a half. After the race, the Lelaps rowed home from Exeter, a distance of twenty-seven miles, in two hours and fifty-five minutes. The club were the recipients of many courtesies on the part of the regatta committee, and from the students of the academy. The names of the Lelaps are as follows: C. O. Tiffany, (stroke,) C. P. Lamprey, J. Albert Sanborn, I. Kimball, jr., C. A. Hazlett, A. W. Walker, F. G. Moses, (coxswain.)

A Little Mistake.

[South London Press.]

Lately a grand postoffice official happened to be passing through a government office with which he was not connected. There he saw a man standing before the fire, reading a newspaper. Hours afterward, returning by the same way, he was shocked to find the same man, legs extended before the same fire, still buried in the columns of a newspaper. "Hallo, sir!" cried the indignant head of the department, "what are you doing?" "Can't you see what I'm doing?" was the answer. "Sir, I came through this office four hours ago and found you reading the paper; I return, and you are still wasting your time in the same manner." "Very true; you have stated the case to a nicety." Hereupon head of department naturally fires up. "What is your name, sir," he demands. "Well, I don't know that my name is any affair of yours—what is your name?" "Sir, I would have you know that I am the So-and-so of the postoffice?" "Indeed! Well, I am very glad to hear it. I am, sir, simply one of the public, who have been kept waiting here for hours for an answer to a simple question, and I shall be much obliged if you will use your influence to get me attended to."

—A gentleman in a New England railway train, infuriated beyond endurance by the rapid and relentless appearances of the pop-corn and candy fiend, said to him, that if any more of those perambulating refreshments were deposited about him they would immediately be thrown out of the window or on the floor. Intimidated by this threat, the fiend passed him once nor offered the beguiling maple sugar. But the next time he made his round, the inevitable pop-corn was bestowed upon our hero, who calmly flung it to the farther end of a long car. A neighbor, mildly emulating this noble conduct, let the "last new novel," gorgeously bound, slide gently off his knee upon an extremely dirty floor. Crushed at last, the pop-corn man retreated with a glance of unavailing rage.

—The Golden Age, now edited by Theodore Tilton, says:

Grant has lost his money with Jay Cooke, has lost his tears over Henry Clews, and has lost the government's credit with both.

And the Columbus (Ohio) Journal says:

Tilton has lost his place with the Independent, has lost his tears over Vicky Woodhull, and has lost his own credit with both.

—It was a country chap who, after coming to a railroad crossing the other day, and reading the sign, "Look out for the locomotive," climbed to the top, and on gazing down the track, wanted to know "Where'n thunder the old thing was?"

—A water bed—A spring mattress.

—A volume that will bring tears to your eyes—A volume of smoke.

—A country editor reports money "close, but not close enough to be reached."

—The advances of art culture in this country are said to be particularly visible in the improved circus and theatrical posters in use.

—A man who went to Danbury for a fortnight's visit, and was obliged to leave at the end of the first week, told his host that he would take the balance in money.

—Mr. Chawls Thawmpson recently ran his head against a young lady during a cotillion. "Ah! excuse me, dear," he cried; "did it hurt, ah." "No, sir," she replied, "it's too soft to hurt anything."

—A class in mental arithmetic was questioned concerning the number of men required to perform a certain piece of work in a specified time; the answer given was, "twelve men and two thirds." A bright lad, perceiving the oddity of two-thirds of a man instantly replied: "twelve men, and a boy fourteen years old"—fourteen being two-thirds of twenty-one, the legal age of manhood.

'73 REUNION.

THE "HISTORY OF THE RETURN OF THE SONS & DAUGHTERS OF PORTSMOUTH, JULY, 1873," is just published. It contains 96 pages, octavo, and is a thorough detail of everything relating to the three Festal Days,

The Reunion, July 4th,

High School Reunion, 5th,

The Praise Meeting, 6th;

and containing a

Verbatim Report

of every speech that was uttered at the Tent on the 4th and 5th, besides giving a full report of all the Reunion preliminary movements in Portsmouth, Boston and New York. Much of the matter of this work has never yet appeared in any form, and we think it will prove interesting to all who participated in the Three Days' Jubilee.

The work is for sale at the Chronicle Office, J. H. Foster's Bookstore, and at Wm. R. Preston's.

THE NEW DOMESTIC

SEWING MACHINE.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.

28 Market Street, Portsmouth, N. H.

284 Congress Street, Portland, Maine.

aug6-tuoF E. A. JOY, General Agent.

The Singer Still Triumphant!

At the Vienna Exhibition, the SINGER received the Medal of Merit, the Medal of Progress, and three other Medals for superiority of productions. These are the highest Sewing Machine Awards at Vienna. The SINGER received all the medals awarded to either of the competing machines, and two medals more than any other object. Then, in the name of Truth, what is it that prompts people to claim recommendations for the Diploma of Honor? The fact is, no Diploma of Honor has been given to any Sewing Machine Company.

But immeasurably more valuable is The World's Award as shown by sales—proved by sworn returns to the owners of the principal Sewing Machine Patents—which last year amounted to TWO HUNDRED AND NINETEEN THOUSAND, SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHT (219,758) machines, nine out of ten of them being for Family Use. This is over 45,000 more Sewing Machines than were sold by any other company during the same period, and over One Quarter of all the machines sold in 1872. These enormous sales are owing to the long-tested merits of the Singer Machines, which meet the wants of the public in superiority and simplicity of operation, and capability for great variety and excellence of work. That the users of Sewing Machines find these desirable qualities in the Singer beyond all others, is shown by the sales above given, aside from the awards of International Juries, either at home or abroad.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, DROPSY AND HUMORS.

PERUVIAN SYRUP

Makes The Weak Strong.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures a thousand ills simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the system. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid accretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building upon an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

No. 70 STATE ST., OPPOSITE KILBY ST., BOSTON,

After an extensive practice of upwards of thirty years, continues to secure patents in the United States; also in Great Britain, France and other foreign countries. Caveats, Specifications, Assignments, and all papers for Patents, executed on reasonable terms with dispatch. Researches made to determine the validity and utility of Patents of Inventions, and legal and other advice rendered in all matters touching the same. No Agency in the United States possesses superior facilities for obtaining Patents or ascertaining the patentability of inventions.

All necessity for a journey to Washington to procure a Patent and the usual great delay there, are here saved inventors.

TESTIMONIALS.

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse. CHARLES MASON, Commissioner of Patents."

"I have no hesitation in assuring inventors that they cannot employ a man more competent and trustworthy and more capable of putting their applications in a form to secure for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office. EDMUND BURKE, Late Commissioner of Patents."

"Mr. R. H. Eddy has made for me over THIRTY applications for Patents, having been successful in almost every case. Such unmistakable proof of great talent and ability on his part leads me to recommend all inventors to apply to him to procure their Patents, as they may be sure of having the most faithful attention bestowed on their cases and at very reasonable charges. HARD WHITE ASH COAL,
FREE BURNING WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN WHITE ASH COAL,

In order that all coal shall be shipped in good order, a most rigid system of inspection, both at the mines and at the shipping ports, will at all times be enforced. In every district of the coal region there will be appointed a number of competent persons skilled in the preparation of coal, as local inspectors, whose duty it will be to visit the several collieries daily to see that a proper force is at all times employed in removing slate, and to prevent, if possible, any coal being sent from the mines in bad order. In addition to these efforts at prevention, no means will be left untried at the shipping ports to cure the evils of careless preparation. At Schuylkill Haven, Port Clinton and Port Richmond, ALL COAL WILL BE SUBJECTED TO THE PERSONAL EXAMINATION OF A SKILLED INSPECTOR BEFORE IT IS SHIPPED, and if condemned by him, will be dumped in places provided for the purpose, and before being loaded into vessels WILL BE THOROUGHLY REPICKED AND CLEANED BY HAND.

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA,
FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.
This compound of the vegetable alteratives, Sarsaparilla, Dock, Stillingia and Mandrake with the iodides of Potassium and Iron makes a most effectual cure of a series of complaints which are very prevalent and afflicting. It purifies the blood, purges out the lurking humors in the system that undermine health and settle into troublesome disorders. Eruptions of the skin are the appearance on the surface of humors that should be expelled from the blood. Internal derangements are the determination of these same humors to some internal organ, or organs, whose action they derange, and whose substance they disease and destroy. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA expels these humors from the blood. When they are gone, the disorders they produce disappear, such as Ulcerations of the Liver, Stomach, Kidney, Lungs; Eruptions and Erysipelatous Diseases of the Skin, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter and Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Ulcers and Sores, Rheumatism and Neuralgia, Pain in the Bones, Side and Head, Female Weakness, Sterility, Leucorrhœa arising from internal ulceration and uterine disease, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation and General Debility. With their departure, health returns.

The Wicked Flea.

[Marshall (Minn.) Prairie-Schooner.]

Marshall is full of fleas. Every new town has them. They are the aborigines of the country. They contest for their old stamping-grounds with more persistence than the wily savage. Though a little less dangerous, fleas are of nearly the same color as the Indian, and possess many Indian traits of character, principal among which is their uneasiness. Fleas have a special fancy for women, small children, and dogs. Fleas much dislike the smell of tobacco and whiskey, and hence seldom trouble a man. In their tastes they are much unlike the Indians. To capture and execute a flea confers more happiness upon a representative of the female sex than wearing a new bonnet in a crowd for the same length of time. The reader will please pardon a little personal experience with fleas.

We will first state that wife and baby are absent on a visit. Also, that we cannot afford any "luxuries" while running a 7x9 country newspaper. Hence we are no better off, so far as fleas are concerned, than women and barking quadrupeds. Of course we board. Thinking to save expense, we concluded to furnish our own bed, put up in a vacant house, rented for housekeeping purposes when our better-half returns. The house was formerly occupied by railroad boarders. About five minutes after retiring we experienced a feeling of a dozen or more needles pricking different parts of the body at the same time. Our hands were passed spasmodically about to ascertain the cause, but we could feel nothing unusual. Just then the printer who bunked with us began a series of quick, convulsive movements, reaching for his shoulder with one hand and his left foot with the other at the same time, changing hands about every second, and twisting his body like a streaked snake in the grass. Thinking he had an attack of St. Anthony's dance, he arose and lit the lamp. The printer said he felt better, but there was something in the bed. Cautiously turning down the bed-clothes, we discovered what seemed to be a quantity of onion seed nicely distributed over the sheet. Immediately the seeds began to dance like kernels of pop-corn on a hot griddle. Simultaneously we shouted "Fleas!" and rushed to the attack. There they were, great hungry fellows, that probably had had nothing to eat since the railroad hands left, some three weeks before, and they didn't seem at all inclined to run. Not until we had killed seventy-three of the varmints did they beat a retreat.

After clearing the bed and sighting through one or two unmentionable garments for the twentieth time, we again sought a horizontal position, hoping soon to forget our troubles in refreshing sleep. Vain hope. Scarcely had the lamp been extinguished before the implacable foe again assembled in myriads, and commenced an onslaught upon our persons compared with which the first was scarcely a foretaste. All at once we thought of a method of defense which promised success. We would try kerosene. Quietly the burner was removed from the lamp, fingers were dipped in the unusually repulsive fluid, and we began our kerosene bath. The neck and one shoulder were nicely saturated, when there came to our mind the horrid remembrance of a kerosene incident, which filled us with dismay. Our big brother once poured kerosene upon the back of a calf, to kill certain insects less active and less respected than the flea, and the result was dead insects—also dead calf. Lucky we thought of it in time. With a feeling of relief at having cheated some editor out of a kerosene item, we again lay down, thinking the disagreeable smell of the oil would certainly drive away anything that had life and a little sense. Not so, however. On the neck and that greased shoulder was where they bit the worst. It seemed to give them an appetite. In despair, the two of us made a forlorn-hope attack with thumb and finger. But the enemy came in countless num bers and closed in upon us in front, flank and rear. Just as the printer was coming down handsomely on a boss flea, he received a bite on the great toe, which caused him to turn a double somersault and light square upon the lamp which had been placed on the bed. Fortunately the lamp was extinguished; but the bed "slats" gave way, and the next instant two printers, about 5000 fleas, and a quart of kerosene oil were rolling promiscuously on the floor. When brimstone was again brought to bear upon that lamp-wick there was revealed a scene for an artist. On the floor sat the printer, his form doubled up in the shape of a lettter Z, the corners of his mouth drawn in opposite directions, making it resemble the sound hole of a violin, while his hands and arms were wildly describing circles in the air like the self-rake gear of a Wood's improved reaper. We can't remember just exactly how we spent the remainder of that eventful night. There comes at times a vision of a man with no superfluous clothing about him, driving a regiment of fleas from a pair of white linen pants, where they were patiently waiting for their breakfast, and enconcing himself for an hour on a table in an adjoining room, with nought but a quilt about him. Next morning we saw the sun rise. So did the printer. That day when friends asked the cause of our constant gaping we expressed a fear of an immediate attack of fever and ague; but up to the present time we have been unable to find anything that will neutralize the scent of kerosene oil. We don't furnish our own bed any more, just to save expense.

The People contends that the Concord Road earns more than ten per cent. dividends.

Not Far from the Truth.

A correspondent of the New York Globe says: The developments in the Stokes trial are diverting. Did you ever go into court when a capital case was on? Well, the Stokes court-room has none of that air of earnestness and solemnity about it. The trial is evidently a bore to all concerned, and even Stokes looks as though he was sick of the whole thing, and wouldn't mind hanging for the sake of a change. The new testimony struck many who heard it as manufactured for the occasion. Logan told his story too well. He acted like a boy who had been crammed. He is a little more honest and original than they make men of that species. It is so strange that when people undertake to swindle they so often overdo the thing. That Stokes was guilty of the killing everybody knows, and he himself admits. And nine out of ten think he did a good thing for the community when he sent Fisk "where the woodbine twineth." Fisk was one of the worst men we ever had going at large. His business shrewdness, energy, dash, and executive ability only served to gild his moral turpitude and blind men to his unprincipled courses and essential rottenness. Why, had he lived till this time he would have had half the railroads in the country running into his pocket, and owned a bigger harem than the Shah. Of course Beecher defends his business qualities; which is just what we might expect. Beecher lives in Brooklyn, and morals over there differ materially from morals on this side of the East River. But why not deal squarely with Stokes? Punish him for firing the pistol, and pension him for hitting the person who happened to be in the way of the bullet. Were the town polled tomorrow, he would be voted something of a bore but more of a benefactor.

Kissing the President.

At the reception of President Grant and the leading generals of the United States army on Thursday, at Toledo, the following scene took place as reported in the Toledo Commercial:

THE RECEPTION.

Everybody being in readiness the doors were thrown open and the ladies began to pour in, shaking hands with President Grant first, and then passing on to the generals. At the outset the proceedings were marked with such dignity and decorum as would naturally be expected, but as the ceremony progressed a certain familiarity grew up between the visitors and ladies, and gallant Phil Sheridan broke the ice of the occasion by picking up a little girl in his arms and pressing his bristling moustache to her velvet lips. Of course General Custer followed suit, and it was not long before General Sherman and even the President himself were pressing their stiff beards against the rosy lips of the little girls, and portraying every indication of having no very great objection to being allowed a little more license as regards the age of the persons kissed. Our reporter, standing almost between General Sherman and the President, took a deep interest in this proceeding, and will therefore be pardoned by the ladies for entering minutely into this part of the subject.

The crowd still pushed on, and it seemed as if there was just a slight rush on the part of the ladies to hurry up the stairs when they heard that the pleasant pastime of

was a feature of the reception. It was not long before gallant Phil took another departure, and astonished the crowd by kissing a young lady of some sixteen or eighteen summers. General Custer, declaring he would not be outdone, also seized and kissed the young lady, and then General Sherman began to look around him for a good model. He soon found one, and imprinted a kiss upon her fair cheek, only to see her pass by and kiss Generals Sheridan and Custer. The President blushed at the rashness of his young officers, but directly his eyes began to sparkle, and he took out his handkerchief and wiped his mouth. The next real handsome young lady who made her appearance was the fortunate first "grown" lady to get a kiss from the President of the United States. The President seized her hand and pointed his mouth for hers. She drew back at first, but becoming immediately cognizant of the honor conferred upon her, she yielded, and the President gave her lips a soft touch—hardly sufficient to be called a kiss. Of course Generals Sherman, Sheridan and Custer saw this, and a roar of applause followed. General Sherman declared he was as good looking as the President; gallant Phil then pleaded that he knew he was as handsome as General Sherman, and then General Custer was very certain he looked as lovely as any of the rest, and hence the young lady kissed them all, one after the other. This of course opened an excellent opportunity for the fair belles of Toledo and the sunny daughters of the rural districts to kiss the President and some of the military heroes of the late war, and they took advantage of the opportunity. Immediately there commenced a friendly rivalry between Generals Phil. Sheridan and Custer to see who could get the most kisses. The gallant Phil took the lead, and for a time kissed every lady who shook hands with him—except those who were homely.

Gen. Sherman and the President joined in the fray, and at one time were considerably ahead of the younger generals, but we are forced to say, however, that they, like the younger generals, passed every homely lady by with a simple shake of the hand. Our reporter took especial pains to keep a record of the "time," and at the end of a half hour after the kissing had commenced the tally stood as follows:

NUMBER OF PERSONS KISSED.

	Babies.	Little Girls.	Ladies.
President Grant	19	29	32
General Sherman	24	27	38
General Sheridan	17	11	63
General Custer	13	48	67

Of course the young ladies had their preferences, and many of them succeeded in executing a very shrewd flank movement, by passing through once and kissing their favorite, ten dodging out of the ranks and passing around again, thereby giving their favorite an opportunity to tally one more than he was justly due. By this well-executed flank movement, General Sherman succeeded in making an excellent run. Gallant Phil, seeing how his senior was getting the advantage of him, made an attack in the rear, and succeded in capturing several smacks from a crowd of young ladies standing in ambush observing the conflict.

A DISPATCH TO GEN. SHERMAN.

In the heat of the contest then going on, Gen. Sherman received a dispatch from the South, but he was too much "engaged" to read it, and turning around quickly he kissed one of Toledo's fair daughters who stood behind him, and asked her to read the dispatch, and tell him if there was anything important in it. She blushingly accepted it, and attentively perusing it for a few minutes handed it back to the General, remarking, very indignantly, that she saw nothing there "except something about some old grey shirts and socks!" The Commercial reporter asked the General for the dispatch, but the request was refused upon the ground that there might be something in it not appropriate for the press. He explained, however, that he presumed it was a dispatch asking clothing supplies for the yellow fever sufferers down South, as he had received many such applications quite recently, all of which he said, had been granted. The General then resumed his attention to the ladies, and the kissing conflict progressed with unusual fervor.

THE PRESIDENT KISSES A HANDSOME DAUGHTER.

General Custer, whose position was on the left, made a brilliant charge, and for ten minutes kissed every lady that passed him. Just at this moment an old lady came along, accompanied by her daughter, a blushing young girl about eighteen years of age. She stopped in front of the President, and shook hands with him, saying: "Mr. Grant, this is my daughter." The President immediately stooped down and kissed the young lady, much to the surprise of the old lady, and said: "Madam, I am very much pleased to see that you have such a handsome daughter." The old lady was quite astounded, but soon comprehended the situation, and walked away with a smile of satisfaction on her face. The President soon began to show signs of weariness, but Little Phil and Gen. Custer kept up their friendly rivalry in kissing the ladies without any evidence of fatigue. At 4 o'clock, however, the last lady (a colored one, with her baby) came up stairs, and the reception closed.

SUMMARY.

From an accurate account our reporter learned that the President and his attendants kissed the following number of persons each during the reception:

	Babies.	Little Girls.	Ladies.
President Grant	74	113	393
General Sherman	137	147	297
General Sheridan	84	101	410
General Custer	53	133	417

From additional observations taken by our reporter we are enabled to present our readers with an approximation of the muscular power expended in shaking hands with the vast crowd assembled at the hotel for that purpose. No less than 2,000 ladies shook hands with President Grant, Generals Sherman, Sheridan and Custer. Supposing that each one of the eminent men expended enough power in shaking each hand to lift three pounds, (and they certainly did that,) it will be seen that they lifted each about 6,000 pounds during the short space of one hour. If we consider the further amount of muscular power it required to kiss the number of ladies given above, the result will be simply enormous.

The Nemesis of Stock Speculation.

[New York Bulletin.]

It may seem, in ordinary times, to be hugely profitable to play the speculator on a grand scale. To control the whole floating stock of a great railroad, or of two or three roads, so as to be able to put up its price at discretion, and mulct without limit a host of smaller operators who play in the dark and without holding the trump cards—what game could be surer? What so certain of bringing in immense stakes? It is this that has made the vast wealth of our Vanderbilts, our Goulds, our Clarks, our Drews. Their game was played with such immense odds in their favor that, almost inevitably, they won every time. The four names we have mentioned have succeeded in taking perhaps $50,000,000 out of the pockets of the successive droves of dupes who enter the spider-parlors of Wall street.

Every now and then, however, events demonstrate that the game of these king players is not so absolutely guarded and certain as it seems to be. For a series of five, ten or fifteen years, they may go on steadily winning, until their financial power assumes the magnitude of an appalling monopoly, at which the public stand aghast and which legislators are invoked to place under restraint. But, underlying this vast power, there is one weak spot, which when touched makes them like other weak men. Their wealth is mainly employed in margins. Their ambition to control immense schemes leads them to buy five times as much as they can pay for, and they have to use the millions of stock they have bought as collaterals for loans. When a panic strikes the market, their stocks decline, the margins on their loans are narrowed down, and they have to sell like others to make good their accounts with their leaders. The sales thus made to protect themselves further, weaken their securities and create fresh demands to keep good their margins, which is followed by fresh sales of their stocks and a still further decline in prices; and thus the process of impoverishment goes on until the decline in the market value of their stocks swallows up their wealth employed in margins.

This is the process we have seen in operation for the last month in Wall street. Millions of money, which had been made for a few succesful speculators out of the crowd of less sagacious ones, has been scattered to the winds, and is now being gathered up by frugal investors in all parts of the country, through purchasing at enormous depreciation the stocks which the railway kings are no longer able to hold. These great leaders of speculation, may be, are not absolutely ruined; but their losses must be counted by millions; and their less wealthy followers, whose large resources constituted a great part of the strength of the chiefs, are generally well-nigh or completely beggared.

Truly, then, there is a Nemesis in stock speculation. The vast irresponsible power which the successful speculator finds it possible to acquire is not, after all, beyond the reach of those natural laws which control all the affairs of society for the common good of all. A Vanderbilt may succeed in acquiring, by sheer dint of shrewdness and speculative trick, a wealth that enables him to control for his own purposes the most important railroads of the continent; but one of those credit panics which brings all enterprise to its true level sweeps over Wall street, and the fruits of his unscrupulous sagacity are distributed among the thrifty and honest men of the country. This may seem a rough sort of justice, but it may be replied upon with the utmost certainty to right the wrongs of the financial department of society. At least we may console ourselves with the reflection that the dreaded storms of Wall street adjust a great many inequalities and do a great deal in the way of administering justice which none of the short-sighted laws of men can ever do. Let those who avow so much faith in the efficiency of written law compare its efficiency with that unwritten law of nature whose potency we have seen illustrated within the last thirty days, and then say to which it is the safer to trust for equity in human affairs.

Suffrage in France.

The people of France for nearly an entire generation, says the Providence Journal, have been accustomed to universal suffrage. Since 1845 they have elected their presidents, when they have had a republic; they have elected their emperor, when they had an empire. They have also chosen in the same way the deputies to the lower house of their National Assembly. Their votes have not always been without large control and discretion on the part of those who governed them, but they have been nominally free. The influence of this practice of voting for their rulers and legislators is now very obvious in the condition of the French people. It has given them all the political education they now possess. They appear to be unsettled and divided in opinion on nearly every fundamental question. They are neither republican, nor monarchial, nor imperial in their convictions, but they are rather a combination of the three. They are afloat and ready for a new experiment on almost any other question that can be named. But they are settled and united on the one question of universal suffrage. There is not a peasant in the country, nor a burgess in any of the towns, who is willing to give up his right to vote for the national officers.

It is in consequence of this universal fact that even the monarchial bureau, which is now so actively preparing for the re-establishment of monarchy, has been obliged to publish a promise that all persons shall be equally eligible to office, and that universal suffrage shall be maintained. To this programme Count Chambord has just given his public approval and adherence. Should he be placed on the throne, his government will thus present the strange phenomenon of a Bourbon monarchy, modified by universal popular suffrage—a sort of government which will have the advantage of being new and untried even in France.

The Late Storm.

Much damage was caused in various parts of New England by the late rain-storm. All the town bridges over the Peabody River at Gorham, have been swept away by the floods of water. One pier of the railroad bridge at Farmington, Me., was washed out. The Sandy river is higher than for several years. William Cilley, of Farmington, is reported to have lost thirty head of cattle by drowning on the neighboring intervales, which are covered with water. At Great Falls, several large trees were uprooted. The road bed of the Great Falls and Conway railroad has suffered severely from freshets, and there were several washouts. The intervales at Plymouth, are flooded, and no trains are running. Nearly nine inches of rain have fallen at Lewiston, Me., since the beginning of the month. A portion of an unfinished building has been carried away at Troy, N. Y.; loss $6000.

A Disabling Disease.

No disease which does not confine a man to his bed so completely unfits him for business as dyspepsia. When the stomach is foul, the brain is always muddy and confused, and as the cares and anxieties of life are a sufficient burden for the organ of thought to bear, without being tormented by the miseries born of indigestion, it is highly desirable for the brain's sake, as well as for the sake of every other portion of the system, that the disordered stomach should be restored with the utmost dispatch to a healthy, vigorous condition. This object can always be accomplished by a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the purest and best of vegetable specifics, which evacuates the morbid humors through the bowels, rouses and tones the torpid stomachs and regulates the liver, imparts firmness to the nerves and clears the sanctorium of its mental cobwebs. Persons subject to attacks of indigestion, bilious headache, irregularity of the bowels, sickness at the stomach, or "the blues," should take the Bitters once or twice a day throughout the present season.

A TRIUMPH OF MEDICAL ART.

Yes, a triumph we call it, when medicine can be so "fixed up" as to be pleasant to take and yet accomplish the object intended. Such a medicine is Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets, samples of which the writer procured and tested in his own family. The Pellets (little pills) are about one-fifth the size of an ordinary pill, made of highly concentrated root and herbal extracts, and sugar-coated.—Frankfort. (Ind.) Weekly Crescent. 7pk.

MISS M. E. B. MILLER'S

SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES,

No. 6 Daniel Street. o11

Local Matters.

S. J. Court.

Thursday, the trial of the libel for divorce, Anna A. Gray vs. John T. Gray, occupied the greater part of the day. The allexations of the libel were extreme cruelty and adultery. Judge Foster, after an exceedingly patient hearing of a mass of conflicting evidence, was of opinion that the libellant had failed to sustain the allegations of her libel, and accordingly dismissed the case, remarking that a more disagreeable exhibition of family quarrels had probably never appeared in the courts of this State. Goodall for libellant, Page for libellee.

Oliver Garland of Hampton was divorced from Mary E. Garland.

The Grand Jury reported 45 indictments, and were discharged; of these 35 are for violations of the liquor law.

The following prisoners were arraigned, and severally pleaded "not guilty":

Fred Varney and George Anderson, larceny of treasury notes and bank bills; James M. Surrey, fraudulent conveyance of property; John Dunbar and Warren White, larceny of riding whips. This indictment was nol. pros'd by the Solicitor. John F. Parks, assault upon his daughter, Ida Parks; Carl Schulten, assault upon Clara Philbrick, at North Hampton; George W. Hoyt, arson; Elisha Dunbrack, stealing watch; Otis A. Cate, burning barn of Charles Hayes.

The Eastern Railroad was indicted for killing Capt. Norton of Gardiner, Me., at Seabrook.

The Fair.

We learn that a grand concert by Harlow's full Naval Band will be given at St. Mary's church on Monday evening next. The well known musical merit of this band needs no commendation from us, and will doubtless attract a large crowd.

The Fair will continue to-night, and will close on Saturday evening so that all those who desire to attend must do so at once. The announcement of the result of voting on the different leading articles will probably be made Saturday.

The Changing Seasons

Send our tradesmen to the emporiums of business for full supplies of new goods, and with the approach of cool weather the shop-keepers are offering bargains in fall and winter goods. Those obliging traders, Fay & Shedd, are offering bargains to customers that are worthy the attention of all who wish to be clothed warmly and well. The experiment of putting in a large stock of furnishing goods and selling at small profits has proved a success with them, and their store is now stocked with every variety of furnishing goods for the fall and winter. Youths' suits may be had at prices ranging from $10 to $22 each. There are boys' suits in all styles and qualities; gents' and boys' fine bosom shirts, all wool, colored and white; Cartwright & Warner's fine under-shirts; cloth and castor gloves and Jouvin's kids. In overcoats, Fay & Shedd have a specialty. They advertise them from $8 to $30 each, and we saw as good and comfortable ones as any person need wear, for $22. There's but little excuse for mankind to suffer for want of warm clothing while Fay & Shedd are offering it at such low prices.

Cole's "Voyage of Life."

Miss Louise Cherrington is canvassing this city for the sale of a series of four allegorical engravings, representing Childhood, Youth, Manhood, and Old Age. These engravings are from the original paintings by Thomas Cole and are elegantly engraved by Smillie, B. B. Russell, of Boston, being the publisher. We copy descriptions of the original paintings:

"CHILDHOOD. Foating gently down a stream is a boat, made of the sculptured figures of the Hours; the prow is formed by the Present Hour holding forth an emblem of Time. It is filled with flowers; and on these a little child is seated, while a guardian-angel is at the helm, with his wings protectingly extended over the child.

YOUTH. The voyager has taken the helm into his own hands; and the angel stands upon the shore, looking at him with 'a look made of all sweet accord,' as if he said in his heart, 'God be with thee, thoughtless mortal!' To the boat only a few of the flowers are now clinging; and we perceive that the castle in the air, apparently so real, has only a white cloud for its foundation, and that, ere long, the stream makes a sudden turn, rushing with the fury of a maddened steed down a terrible ravine.

MANHOOD. The voyager is seen near the verge of a cataract, while a fearful storm rages around him. The rudderless bark is about to plunge into the abyss below, the voyager imploring the aid of Heaven. Demoniacal images are holding forth their temptations in the clouds around him. The agonies of his soul are dispelled or subdued by a reflection of celestial light stealing through the storm, and by the smiles of his guardian-angel, visibly stationed in the far-off sky.

OLD AGE. The voyager, with hoary head, has reached the point where the waters of time and eternity mingle together. The hour-glass is gone and the shattered bark is ready to be drawn into the fathomless waters beneath. The old man is on his knees, with clasped hands, and his eyes turned heavenward. Above the form of the voyager is hovering his angel, who is about to transport him to his home; and as the eye wanders upward, an infinite host of heavenly ministers are seen ascending and descending the cloudy steps which lead to the bosom of God."

No one who sees the engravings can well avoid a desire to possess them, and the lovers of the beautiful will find much in them to study. The plates have been retouched and the work of the artist speaks for itself in every picture.

Laconics.

The firemen of Portsmouth are considering the subject of having a grand New England muster in this city next year.

Gen. Humphries has submitted an estimate of $50,000 for building the earthwork at Jerry's Point, for the fiscal year 1875.

Mr. Sleeper, assistant keeper of White Island lighthouse, informs us that eight hundred visitors registered their names there the past season.

The Governor and Council have appointed Capt. Nathan F. Mathes as Pilot Commissioner, in place of Capt. Wm. L. Dwight, declined. The Board now consists of Messrs. Chas. A. Chase, Wm. H. Sise and N. F. Mathes.

The Grand Division of Sons of Temperance held their annual meeting in Concord on the 22d. The attendance showed an increasing interest in the order throughout the State. The report of the Grand Scribe showed an increase in membership; also that quite a number of new divisions had been instituted during the year—four or five during the last three weeks. The address of the G. W. P. took strong grounds in favor of political action, and his views were adopted by the Grand Division. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: C. A. Norton, M. D., G. W. P.; A. G. M. Titcomb, G. W. A.; F. A. Crawford, G. R. S.; C. M. Boswell, G. T; A. C. Hardy, G. C.; F. L. Thorndike, G. C.; Geo. Woodruff, G. S. Dr. Chas. A. Norton of this city was chosen Grand Representative to the National Division, which meets in Washington next April.

of every speech that was uttered at the Tent on the 4th and 5th, besides giving a full report of all the Reunion preliminary movements in Portsmouth, Boston and New York. The Singer Still Triumphant!

At the Vienna Exhibition, the SINGER received the Medal of Merit, the Medal of Progress, and three other Medals for superiority of productions. These are the highest Sewing Machine Awards at Vienna. The SINGER received all the medals awarded to either of the competing machines, and two medals more than any other obtained. Then, in the name of Truth, what is it that prompts people to claim recommendations for the Diploma of Honor? The fact is, no Diploma of Honor has been given to any Sewing Machine Company.

But immeasurably more valuable is The World's Award as shown by sales—proved by sworn returns to the owners of the principal Sewing Machine Patents—which last year amounted to TWO HUNDRED AND NINETEEN THOUSAND, SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHT (219,758) machines, nine out of ten of them being for Family Use. This is over 45,000 more Sewing Machines than were sold by any other company during the same period, and over One Quarter of all the machines sold in 1872. These enormous sales are owing to the long-tested merits of the Singer Machines, which meet the wants of the public in uniformity and simplicity of constructions, and capability for great variety and excellence of work. That the owners of Sewing Machines find these desirable qualities in the Singer beyond all others, is shown by the sales above given, aside from the awards of International Juries, either at home or abroad.

Makes The Weak Strong.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but instead of infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building upon an iron foundation.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

AMERICAN & FOREIGN PATENTS.

R. H. EDDY,
SOLICITOR OF PATENTS,
For Inventions, Trade Marks or Designs.
No. 76 STATE ST., OPPOSITE KILBY ST., BOSTON.

After an extensive practice of upwards of thirty years, continues to secure patents in the United States; also in Great Britain, France and other foreign countries. Caveats, Specifications, Assignments, and all papers for Patents, executed on reasonable terms with despatch. Researches made to determine the validity and utility of Patents of inventions, and legal and other advice rendered in all matters touching the same. Copies of the claims of any patent furnished, by remitting one dollar. Assignments recorded in Washington.

No Agency in the United States possesses superior facilities for obtaining Patents or ascertaining the patentability of inventions.

All necessity for a journey to Washington to procure a Patent and the usual great delay there, are here saved inventors.

TESTIMONIALS.

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse. CHARLES MASON, Commissioner of Patents."

"I have no hesitation in assuring inventors that they cannot employ a more competent and trustworthy and more capable of putting their applications in a form to secure for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office.
EDMUND BURKE,
Late Commissioner of Patents."

"Mr. R. H. Eddy has made for me over THIRTY applications for Patents, having been successful in almost every case. Such unmistakable proof of great talent and ability as his part leads me to recommend all inventors to apply to him to procure their Patents, as they may be sure of having the most faithful attention bestowed on their cases and at very reasonable charges.

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA,
FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.
This compound of the vegetable alteratives, Sarsaparilla, Dock, Stillingia and Mandrake with the Iodides of Potassium and Iron makes a most effectual cure of a series of complaints which are very prevalent and afflicting. It purifies the blood, purges out the lurking humors in the system that undermine health and settle into troublesome disorders. Eruptions of the skin are the appearance on the surface of humors that should be expelled from the blood. Internal derangements are the determination of these same humors to some internal organ, or organs, whose action they derange, and whose substance they disease and destroy. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA expels these humors from the blood. When they are gone, the disorders they produce disappear, such as Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Eruptions and Eruptive Diseases of the Skin, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter and Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Ulcers and Sores, Rheumatism and Neuralgia, Pain in the Bones, Side and Head, Female Weakness, Sterility, Leucorrhœa, arising from internal ulceration and uterine disease, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation and General Debility. With their departure, health returns.

Pennsylvania Barns.

Mr. W. C. Croffut, editor of the Minneapolis, Tribune, one of the spiciest, wittiest, and most practical writers in the West, has been taking stroll East, and thus discourses of the barns he saw there:

"May I jump from the foot-lights to the farm?—from Chicago to Pennsylvania? In Chester and Lancaster counties is, I think, the most finished farming in the Union. The farms, composed of a brickdust sort of soil, are cultivated from fence to fence, every rood, as the farms of Flemings and of Brittany are cultivated from hedge to hedge. Cattle stand with their four feet in two feet of clover. Every field is a park. Every barn is a cow-palace. Every pig pen is a porcine paradise. Pennsylvania is pre-eminently the State of barns. Think of a three-story stone barn, with a swell front and dormer windows in the roof, and a luxurious portico where the Sybaritic calves chew the end of sweet contentment on summer evenings! And then behold the little cabin in the rear where the agricultural Dutchman lives with his 'frow,' and where the children lie on the floor and envy the happy calves in the lattice portico. Every barn is three times as large as the house, which serves as a sort of appendage, and, as it were, plays second fiddle to it. The barn is headquarters, and the house a sort of sentry-box where the man resides who takes care of it. The barn is slated, painted, corniced, cisterned, lightning-roded, and the pig-sty is glazed, the chicken coops are painted, and the worm-fences are white-washed as far as you can see. I have no doubt the original dwellers here whitewashed the ground for acres around the domicil twice or thrice a year, till they learned its fatality.

"I do not know about the effect on cattle of so much petting. I should think it would tend to make the animals aristocratic. Yet I do not know of any place where cattle are more stuck up than they are in the West. There, you know, we have no barns to speak of. There are townships enough in Minnesota where everything with horns has the same chance to fight for the warm side of a hay-stack in Januarandy, it must be admitted, the weaker animals are considerably hump-backed and subdued in their feelings by April. Moreover, here the farmers use fertilizers, but in Minnesota we have an idea that the earth is an orange to be sucked, a goose to be plucked, a sponge to be squeezed, a reservoir to be everlastingly drawn from, without in the least diminishing its flow. All through the central West they are learning what Minnesota has yet to learn, that 'Nature's wheat restorer,' to which the poet so touchingly alludes, is not balmy sleep, but manure."

The Bubble Speculations of the Last Century.

Benson J. Lossing reviews in the Poughkeepsie Eagle the famous Mississippi scheme and the South Sea bubble, the two great financial sensations of the last century. The Mississippi scheme originated, it will be remembered, in the bad state of the finances of the French government. That government lent itself to an immense scheme for swindling the people, in order to fill its coffers. The company, with John Law, a Scotchman, possessing a great reputation as an Amsterdam broker, as its head, had a monopoly of the trade of the Mississippi, on condition that it should relieve France of its debt. The most extravagant stories of the richness of that valley, were told, and the excitement among all classes at Paris, was intense. The company was chartered, and, after its shares had gone up to 1,200 per cent. above par, burst. Wide financial ruin followed, and Law died in poverty at Vienna. The counterpart of this organization in England, the South Sea company, was to have a monopoly of the South Sea trade and was to confer the same favor on the British government, that Law had promised to the French. Its shares rose to above 1,000 per cent. and as a consequence a great number of similar companies sprung up around it. The objects of some of them were very curious. One was "for planting of mulberry trees and breeding of silk worms in Chelsea park;" another "for importing a number of large jackasses from Spain in order to propagate a larger breed of mules in England" and a clergyman proposed a company "for discovering the land of Ophir," and monopolizing the gold and silver of that country. Toward the end of July, 1720, when the stocks of the various London concerns exceeded the value of fifteen hundred million dollars, news came of the bursting of the Mississippi bubble. The shares of the South Sea soon fell, from 850 to 175. Share-holders pressed their shares upon the market with the eagerness of men fleeing from a falling building. Thousands of families were reduced at one blow to absolute poverty. Old families, whose estates were lost, disappeared from society, and the names of many noblemen were dropped from the list of the peerage of England forever. The event stimulated emigration to America, where ruined men hoped to retrieve their fortunes. From the debtor's prisons in England, Oglethorpe procured most of the first emigrants who accompanied him to Georgia and founded that State.

—A Cincinnati firm received a letter from a correspondent in Mississippi, saying: "Gents. I am Due you $26.10-100 which plesa hold up on me a few days I happen to a misfortune this day 2 weeks ago & I had to kill a man in Self Defence which my Lawyer fee cost me 500.00 which throws me behind a little I am all right now."

Stokes Testifies.

Edward S. Stokes was allowed to give his version of the Fisk affair on the witness stand, Thursday, as follows:

I am the prisoner in this case; am 35 years of age; born in Philadelphia; was in the oil refining business in Brooklyn up to my arrest, January 8, 1871, on a charge of embezzlement; became acquainted with Fisk in July, 1869; was spending the summer in Saratoga, and he telegraphed for me and I came and entered into business relations with him, and so remained until my removal from office in the company; it was stipulated in the lease given to the company that the capacity of the refinery should be doubled by the company on my taking thirty per cent. instead of half interest; I believed I had large claims against Fisk, which I could enforce at law; I was examined as a witness on the morning of the encounter in the prosecution at Judge Bixby's court against Fisk, jr., for libel on Mrs. Mansfield; Fisk was not there; the last time I saw her was three weeks previous at Niblo's, and I heard a rumor that he was sick and did not hear on the 6th of January that he was out; I left the court with John McKeon and Colonel Fellows, and we drove to Delmonico's, corner of Broadway and Chambers street, and had oysters and ale; after that went to Mr. Andrew's office and told him I was afraid if I went to Rhode Island to attend the board of appeals of the trotting association in my case, which met January 9th in Providence, Fisk might say I ran away, and get a requisition to bring me back and disgrace me in some way; he said I need have no fear, as the indictment had been rejected and no proceedings were pending; I still feared that Fisk might do something, and I went to Mr. Bixby and he told me I might go to Providence; from his office I went to a carriage stand in Broadway and drove to the Hoffman House to get ready to go. My papers were in my box at Mansfield's. So I drove there, and on seeing the blinds down recollected that she had been ill that morning, and did not get out of the coupe; I saw no one in the window; I told the driver to take me to the Grand Central, which was not singular, as I wanted to get near it; I did not see Fisk's carriage that day and did not know he was out, and had no idea he was going to the Grand Central; never saw the Morses to my knowledge, but heard a rumor that Fisk used to go there; after getting out of the coupe went to Chamberlain & Dodge's when I saw Mr. Ingraham and Mr. Smith., and the latter told me to look for my witness at the corner of Amity street; went down and on my way met Mr. Bailey at the corner of Great Jones street and asked him to come with me, that I was going to get tickets for the Black Crook; while passing the Grand Central saw a lady in the window of parlor 207, and thinking I recognized her as as a lady I had seen in Saratoga, lifted my hat; finished the conversation with Mr. Bailey and asked him to come into the hotel, that I would not delay long, but he declined; I went in by the private stairs and up to the second floor, where I had never been before; looked in at the parlor and saw that I did not know the lady, and not to appear as if rude passed on and turned back, looked in a second time and the lady came out and went up to the third floor, and I went back to the ladies' stairs. I had on an overcoat (a heavy, whitish Irish frieze coat produced) also dogskin gloves lined with wool, and carried a cane; had not any expectation of meeting Fisk and no suspicion of his coming; I did not go into any room nor look out to see if he was coming. I had my pistol, and always carried it in the outer pocket when I had an overcoat. As I was going down stairs I saw Fisk coming up with a rush, and have a pistol in both hands, cocking it; saw him coming through the outer door, but did not know him, as it was pretty dark, until he came to the second door, and then I knew him instantly. I did not turn back, for I had no chance, but cried: "don't fire," and jumped from the right to the left side, nearly falling on the bannister, and on the instant, leaning on the bannister with the left, fired two shots with closed hand and dropped my pistol; I believed my life was in danger; knew it was; I had no intention of taking life; when going into the private entrance I saw the boy Redmond, but did not see Thomas Hart there at all; the only person around when I went back up stairs was Mr. Hill, and Hart's evidence is all manufactured and concocted; my reason for going back to the stairs was to get out of the line of fire of Fisk's pistol; I saw it quite plainly; my reason for going to No. 207 was I thought it was a continuation of the hall; I told Mr. Hill a man was shot; the next person I met was the French parlor man De Corley, who was a witness for me on the first trial, and has mysteriously disappeared.

I tried to find him as a witness, and could not; I did not go into the parlor 207 or throw anything away; after telling De Corley to get a doctor, went down the main stairs to the hall, telling several persons a man was shot and to get a doctor down stairs; a man coming behind said: "Here, they want you;" turned around and he laid his hands on me, and they all laid hands on me, and I objected and said I wasn't going to run away, and they took off their hands then; Mr. Fowers came up, and they began searching me, but found nothing, and I objected to so many persons putting their hands in my pockets; an officer took me up stairs and I was taken to the room where Colonel Fisk was sitting upright with his coat off, and without assistance; and the officer made some remarks, and Fisk said, bowing his head: "Mr. Stokes," and that was all, and the officer said: "Come," and took me away on the instant to the station. [Here Mr. Tremaine offered to prove that the prisoner told Mr. McKeon and his father, on their first interview with him after his arrest, that Fisk drew a pistol on him, but the evidence was ruled out and the defence took exception.]

Witness here testified to statements made to him by the woman Mansfield and Mrs. Williams as to Fisk's threats to wipe him out. He heard of such threats from different parties for months, and was under constant fear for his life, and had to give up rooms at the Worth House in consequence, as the windows were so accessible, and lost $600 by doing so. Men were on his track every day. "As to Fisk's character," continued the witness, "I knew him to be unscrupulous, despotic, revengeful." Never told Mr. Parker that Fisk was a blackmailer and would shoot him for something; never went down a side street except in a close carriage; was reconciled with him in October, 1870, but a week after commenced quarrelling again; then had another reconciliation.

At the reconciliation in October, 1870, in Mansfield's back parlor, he told me every time he saw me his blood boiled; that he had all arrangements to railroad me to State prison, but now it was all right and the indictment would be dismissed. He said it was dangerous to cross their path; their track was cold and clammy as the grave, and when men cross their path they stretch out their hand and the men disappear somehow.

Readables.

Secretary Richardson has decided to pay out silver hereafter, the same as currency.

A newspaper published at Lexington, Mo., contained recently a letter, dated at St. Louis, October 1, and signed by one H. Clay Harper, in which the writer offers to bet $5000 that President Grant will be assassinated before the 10th day of April, 1874. The editor comments upon the letter by saying: "We have only to add that it will afford us profound pleasure to announce on the morning of April 11, that Mr. Harper has won his bet."

According to the returns at Harrisburg, the next Legislature of Pennsylvania will consist of twenty Republicans, twelve Democrats and one Liberal Republican in the Senate, and sixty Republicans, thirty-eight Democrats and two Independent Democrats in the House. This gives the Repuplicans majorities of seven in the Senate, twenty-four in the House and thirty-one on joint ballot. In the last Legislature the Republican majorities were three in the Senate, twenty in the House and twenty-three on joint ballot.

It seems that the Modoc war was a religious war. Mr. Meacham, who had something to do with those peace negotiations which resulted in the hostilities among the ava beds, has been lecturing in San Francisco, and he declares that, as the devout Modoc firmly believes that where a man is born there he must die, if he would preven his soul and body from wandering separately and disconsolately in the happy hunting-grounds, the determination of these Indians not to leave the Lost River country was natural and inevitable. It is very comforting to have the exact cause of Captain Jack's obstinacy explained.

A Franklin temperance man consoles himself persecuted, on account of his principles, because he has had a rope with a noose at one end and a brick at the other tied to his door knob. They have been mimicking the old way Solomon used to do things, at Laconia, thus: John L. Wallis of Sanbornton contended that Wm. H. Rollins had his heifer. Rollins insisted that the heifer was his own, and so they disputed the question at the recent session of the court. The heifers and the two conjectural mothers were in attendance at the trial, which resulted in allowing Rollins to keep the calf, under the assumption that the mother knew her own offspring.

The Cornell Tragedy.

C. W. Wason and C. H. Lee, the two students of Cornell University who with Mortimer M. Leggett fell down a precipice, when the latter was killed, having recovered from their injuries sufficiently, appeared before the coroner's jury at Ithaca, N. Y., and stated what they knew of the affair. Wason testified: "When I got over the fence Legget was standing with one or two of the boys; I took his arm and we walked down to a large tree; I had some conversation with one of the boys; Leggett was not leaning against the tree at that time; don't think I had hold of him before; I then stood him against the tree, or rather he leaned against it; I had charge of him because I was better acquainted with him than the other boy; he was leaning against the tree, and I stood about a foot from him or within reaching distance: in about three or four minutes I saw his body inclining to one side as though his feet were slipping and he was going to fall; he was on the right side of the tree, or rather on the south side; I thought he was merely falling to the ground, not down the precipice; I moved forward to steady him, and in so doing stepped on what I thought was a limb; believe now it was a root of the tree; it caused me to slip, and I fell over the brink; did not succeed in doing what I intended or in supporting him; in attempting to save him, I tell myself; don't know how Leggett came to fall; his arms were not pinioned in any way."

Lee testified: "I was in the field between the fence and the tree; then I saw Wason slip and disappear, Leggett disappearing an instant afterward; there was hardly four feet between them when they fell; I was entirely ignorant that there was a precipice there; was greatly surprised to see them disappear, and imagined they must have slipped down a bank; the idea of a precipice never struck me; my natural impulse was to help them, and acting upon it I ran or moved diagonally off the cliff."

This testimony having been taken the jury rendered the following verdict:—

"The jury being duly charged and sworn to inquire on the part of the people when, where and how the said Mortimer M. Leggett came to his death, do find that said Mortimer M. Leggett, a student of Cornell University, came to his death on the night of October 10, 1873, between the hours of 9 and 10 o'clock, by accidentally falling from a cliff on the south side of Six-Mile Creek, in the village of Ithaca, Tompkins county, New York."

Professor Burt G. Wilder of Cornell University, has written a letter, which was printed in the New York Tribune, in which he takes this sad affair as a text, and argues against secret societies in and out of college. In the first place he objects to the coroner's verdict, as follows:—

"I have taken sufficient interest in the case to examine the scene of the accident, to attend the more important portions of the inquest, and to study the whole evidence, together with the method of its elucidation. I know nothing of legal discriminations but the verdict of a coroner's jury is presumably intelligible to the common mind. Legget voluntarily put himself in charge of these young men. From the moment of the blindfolding he was as helpless and irresponsible for his own safety as an infant: more so than is a passenger who enters a railway train; and it was the duty of those assuming this charge to protect him from all avoidable harm. The only causes of death which they could not avoid, would be an earthquake, a lightning stroke, the fall of a tree or a missile from an unseen source. But to lead him toward a ravine, to place him against, or allow him to stand near a tree, upon its very brink, even at the equal risk of their own safety, was as little justifiable as if they had laid him across a railroad whose existence they had not observed, or had seated him upon a keg of gunpowder whose contents were unknown to them, but, under all the circumstances, presumably doubtful in their nature. With all the candor and impartiality at my command, I have supposed my dog in the circumstances of the young man who was killed, and to my great regret find it impossible to accept the verdict as satisfactory. A fortiori, as a possible relative of a human being who might hereafter meet his death under similar circumstances, I must regard the verdict as insufficient. I hold that blame attaches to all in greater or less degree, and that this blame should be indicated in the verdict, not in any way as punishment to the present parties to the occurrence, but as a solemn warning to others hereafter so engaged."

Satisfied with the Weather.

We never knew more than one man who was perfectly satisfied with the weather at all times and under all circumstances. It was Chubb. In summer, when the thermometer bolted up among the nineties, Chubb would come to the front door with beads of perspiration standing out all over his red face, until his head would look like a raspberry, and would look at the sky and say: "Splendid—perfectly splendid! Noble weather for the poor and for the ice companies and the washer-women! They don't shake up any such climate as this in Italy. Gimme my umbrella, Harriet, while I sit out yer on the step and enjoy it." In winter, when the mercury would creep down fifteen degrees below zero, and the cold was severe enough to freeze the inside of Vesuvius solid to the centre of the globe, Chubb would sit on a fence and exclaim, "By Jingo! did you ever see such weather as this? I like an atmosphere that freezes up your very marrer. It helps the coal trade and keeps the snakes quiet. Don't talk of summer time to me. Gimme cold and give it to me stiff." When there was a drought, Chubb used to meet us in the street and remark: "No rain yet, I see! Magnificent, isn't it? I want my weather dry; I want it with the dampness left out. Moisture breeds fever and ague, and wets your clothes. If there is anything I despise it's to carry an umbrella. No rain for me, if you please." When it rained for a week, and swamped the country, Chubb often dropped in to see us, and to observe: "I dunno how you feel about this yer rain, but it allus seems to me that the heavens never drop no blessings but when we have a long wet spell. It makes the corn jump and cleans the sewers. I wouldn't give a cent to live in a climate where there was no rain. Put me on the Nile, and I'd die in a week. Soak me through and through to the inside of my undershirt, and I feel as if life was bright and beautiful, and sorror nothing but nonsense." Chubb was always happy in a thunder storm. He would say: "Put me in a thunder storm and let the lightnin' play around me, and I'm at home. I'd rather have one storm that'd tear the inside out of the continent than a dozen of years little dribblin', waterin'-pot showers. If I can't have a rippin' and a roarin' storm I don't want none." One day Chubb was upon his roof fixing a shingle, when a tornado struck him, lifted him off, carried him a quarter of a mile, and dashed him with such terrible force against a fence that his leg was broken. As they carried him home we met him, and when we asked him how he felt, he opened his eyes and languidly said: "Immortal powers! what a storm that was! When it does blow it suits the senior member of the Chubb family if it blows hard. I'd give both legs if we could have a squall like that every day. I—I—" Then he fainted. We want Chubb elected President. He is the only man in the universe who don't growl at the weather, and he ought to have glory and honor.

A Disabling Disease.

No disease which does not confine a man to his bed so completely unfits him for business as dyspepsia. When the stomach is foul, the brain is always muddy and confused, and as the cares and anxieties of life are a sufficient burden for the organ of thought to bear, without being tormented by the miseries born of indigestion, it is highly desirable for the brain's sake, as well as for the sake of every other portion of the system, that the disordered stomach should be restored with the utmost dispatch to a healthy, vigorous condition. This object can always be accomplished by a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the purest and best of vegetable specifics, which evacuates the morbid humors through the bowels, rouses and tones the torpid stomachs and regulates the liver, imparts firmness to the nerves and clears the sensorium of its mental cobwebs. Persons subject to attacks of indigestion, billious headache, irregularity of the bowels, sickness at the stomach, or "the blues," should take the Bitters once or twice a day throughout the present season.

A TRIUMPH OF MEDICAL ART.

Yes, a triumph we call it, when medicine can be so "fixed up" as to be pleasant to take and yet accomplish the object intended. Such a medicine is Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets, samples of which the writer procured and tested in his own family. The Pellets (little pills) are about one-fifth the size of an ordinary pill, made of highly concentrated root and herbal extracts, and sugar-coated.—Frankfort. (Ind.) Weekly Crescent. 7gl.

The hearing in the equity suit, Chandler vs. Pickering, was resumed, and finished, Thursday.

Divorces decreed: Jane E. Toppan (of Brentwood) from Christopher G. Toppan; Ellen C. Langley (of Portsmouth) from C. Langley; Joseph H. Gage (of Salem) from Agnes J. Gage; Mary N. Ramsey (of Portsmouth) from William B. Ramsey; Ursula Batchelder (of Northwood) from Chas. C. Batchelder; Eliza E. Stevens (of Windham) from Leonard S. Stevens.

Adjourned to Monday, when the criminal docket will be taken up.

A Surprise.

The pastor, Rev. John A. Goss, of the Court Street Christian church, was very much and agreeably surprised, Thursday evening, by the opening of his door, through which about seventy of his flock and friends entered. For several hours the "head of the house" was not master, as he became entertained in place of entertaining. After those affectionate salutes and many kind words to their shepherd, which was interspersed with songs, giving tokens of the heart's gratitude, the company broke up with prayers, leaving behind relics in the shape of cash $30, a barrel of flour, nearly half a hundred weight of sugar, besides other "corporeal sustainers," with items of wearing apparel. The gifts were received with a feeling known only to a hard-working minister whose progress will be more earnest in the future as he partakes of these blessings.

May the union of friendships be made more strong with pastor and flock by this gathering is the wish of an invited guest.

R.

Cole's "Voyage of Life."

The poet James T. Fields in a very felicious manner alluded to these series of pictures in his address at Portsmouth, July 4, 1873:

"Mr. President, Brothers and Sisters: In that imaginative series of paintings called 'The Voyage of Life,' by our thoughtful American artist, Cole, we see the child, tended by its guardian-angel, in a boat laden with flowers, floating out into the stream between banks that are gilded by the rising sun; then the youth full of hope and courage, taking the helm into his own hand, his guardian-spirit gazing upon him anxiously from the shore; then the mature man driven onward into the eddies and rapids of the river; and then the gray-haired voyager, who, having approached the mouth of the stream, is being launched into that great, mysterious ocean which lies in shadow, dark and vague, before him. Cole might have painted that picture from our own abounding river, with its flowery banks, its eddying forces, and its grand and lordly union with the sea.

There runs the stream; such is the voyage of life; here stood our guardian-angels, and watched us as we hurried away from these fair and peaceful shores. Some of us return to bless them; and some have sailed out beyond the billows into the silent land."

These elegant and desirable engravings are now offered to the public for the first time by canvassers, at $5 per set.

[Concord Monitor, 23d.]

A finely painted portrait of Hon. Levi Woodbury, Ex-Governor of New Hampshire, was received by the Secretary of State, this morning. It is in an elegant frame 4 1-2 by 4 feet, outside dimensions, with an oval center 3 by 2 1-2 feet. Gov. Woodbury is painted in a sitting posture, leaning slightly to the right, with elbow resting upon a book, and forefinger touching the chin. His left arm rests upon the arm of the chair, and in his hand he holds a letter. At the bottom of the frame is the following in black letters upon a gilded tablet:

LEVI WOODBURY,
GOOVERNOR OF N. H., 1823
Presented by His CHILDREN.

This valuable gift to the State will be highly appreciated by our people.

The Eliot-So. Berwick Case.

In the representative district composed of South Berwick and Eliot, in York County, Thomas J. Goodwin was the democratic candidate and George H. Wakefield, the republican. The official count of the returns just made by the Governor and Council, gives the following result:

South Berwick—Thomas J. Goodwin	286
George H. Wakefield	241
Eliot—Thomas Goodwin	173
George H. Wakefield	191
SUMMARY.
Thomas J. Goodwin	286
Thomas Goodwin	173
George H. Wakefield	402

Accordingly Mr. Wakefield gets the certificate and Mr. Goodwin, on account of this omission of one letter of his name in the Eliot votes, must look to the legislature for his seat.

'73 REUNION.

THE "HISTORY OF THE RETURN OF THE SONS & DAUGHTERS OF PORTSMOUTH, JULY, 1873," just published. It contains 96 pages, octavo, and is a thorough detail of everything relating to the three Festal Days,

The Reunion, July 4th,
High School Reunion, 5th,
The Praise Meeting, 6th;

and containing a

of every speech that was uttered at the Tent on the 4th and 5th, besides giving a full report of all the Reunion preliminary movements in Portsmouth, Boston and New York. Much of the matter of this work has never yet appeared in any form, and we think it will prove interesting to all who participated in the

The Singer Still Triumphant!

At the Vienna Exhibition, the SINGER received the Medal of Merit, the Medal of Progress, and three other Medals for superiority of productions. These are the highest Sewing Machine Awards at Vienna. The SINGER received all the medals awarded to either of the competing machines, and two medals more than any other obtained. Then, in the name of Truth, what is it that prompts people to claim recommendations for the Diploma of Honor? The fact is, no Diploma of Honor has been given to any Sewing Machine Company.

But immeasurably more valuable is The World's Award as shown by sales—proved by sworn returns to the owners of the principal Sewing Machine Patents—which last year amounted to TWO HUNDRED AND NINETEEN THOUSAND, SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHT (219,758) machines, nine out of ten of them being for Family Use. This is over 45,000 more Sewing Machines than were sold by any other company during the same period, and over One Quarter of all the machines sold in 1872. These enormous sales are owing to the long-tested merits of the Singer Machines, which meet the wants of the public in superiority and simplicity of construction, and capability for great variety and excellence of work. That the makers of Sewing Machines find these desirable qualities in the Singer beyond all others, is shown by the sales above given, aside from the awards of International Juries, either at home or abroad.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, DROPSY AND HUMORS.

PERUVIAN SYRUP
Makes The Weak Strong.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the Blood, and cures "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, assisting and facilitating secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Rheumatism, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building upon an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

The Marvellous Country.

The following interesting extract is from the new subscription book of the above title, issued by Shepard & Gill, Boston. The volume is from the pen of Judge S. W. Cozzens, who, braving the hazards that have usually deterred travellers from entering the interior of Arizona, spent three years among the picturesque wilds of that country and New Mexico. In this work, comprising over five hundred pages, he gives an account of his strange experiences, adventures and escapes in a country which he well describes as the most most marvellous on this continent. The book will afford a fund of rare and valuable historical information not attainable elsewhere, and its descriptions of the country with its gold and silver mines, its ruins of ancient cities, its relics of a race of people now entirely effaced from the earth, as well as of the savage tribes now inhabiting the country, combines with the author's experience in this strange land to form a story as fascinating as a romance. There has been an exceptionally large advance demand for the volume, which it is announced, will be published in superb style, embellished by over one hundred illustrations by eminent artists, and elegantly printed and bound.

A FIGHT WITH THE NAVAJOES.

How long I slept I could not tell. I awoke with a start, and a strong presentiment that there was something wrong.

What had awakened me so suddenly, or the cause of the presentiment, I did not know. As I lay for a moment, endeavoring to account for this singular impression, I distinctly heard the sharp, quick ring of a rifle-shot apparently on the other side of the pueblo. There was nothing alarming in the sound itself, but the feeling I had experienced on first awakening still oppressed me, and I anxiously listened for a repetition of the cause of my alarm. Nothing, however, disturbed the stillness of the glorious night, save the whippoorwill's cry, or the occasional croak of a frog near the little stream that ran quietly by our camp.

Suddenly I heard the sound of five or six shots in quick succession, apparently coming from the direction of the pueblo; and as I knew that scarcely one in thirty of the Zunis possessed fire-arms, I was confident that whatever the occasion, there must, in any event, be a large number gathered together.

I sprang to my feet just in time to see Don Rafael appear from the other side of the wagon, rifle in hand, and to notice the dangerous glitter of his wicked black eyes. He saw me, placed his finger upon his lips, and said, "Hist! Navajoes."

Instantly rousing Dr. Parker, who was a very sound sleeper, we at once prepared to give the Indians a warm reception, should they favor our camp with a visit, though Don Rafael seemed to think we had nothing to fear from them. Telling him to call Jimmy, I learned, much to my annoyance, that he had not yet returned to camp, although it was now nearly two o'clock in the morning.

What could have become of him? I was exceedingly vexed, and somewhat anxious, at his absence from camp at this particular time.

An examination of our fire-arms revealed the fact that we had twenty-one shots, without reloading or counting upon the condition of Jimmy's fowling-piece, which, experience had shown us, we were as likely to find with the powder on top of the bullets, as the bullets on top of the powder. We were quite satisfied, however, that we could successfully cope with any number of Indians that might attack us.

At this moment the Navajoe war-whoop rang out, filling the still air with its terrific sound, and in spite of our best efforts, almost curdling the blood in our veins, sending a thrill of terror to the very soul as nothing else can. An occasional desultory shot; again the war-whoop rings out, shouting defiance to our ear; and just then Don Rafael's quick eye catches sight of a dozen or more dusky forms visible upon the plain before us. "Carraho, they're comin' this way," said he; "we'd better git behind the wagon."

No sooner said than done; we hastily sought shelter behind it, and waited, revolvers in hand, the coming of the foe.

We saw them approaching as rapidly as their splendid horses could bear them, each second bringing them more plainly and distinctly into view; when suddenly the foremost one, who was bestriding a magnificent gray horse, disappeared from our view like a flash, and then another and another.

"It's them pits," said Don Rafael, as he slowly raised his rifle to his shoulder. At this moment they again uttered their terrible war-whoop, completely drowning, not only Don Rafael's voice, but the sound of his rifle, as well as that of my own, and causing me, I am quite sure, to send my first shot directly into the face of the moon, that was looking so calmly upon us, instead of into the faces of the Navajoes, for whom it was intended.

They were so near now that we could plainly hear the zip of their arrows as they flew around us on all sides; in return for which we gave them, chamber after chamber, the contents of our revolvers, to which compliment they replied by terrific yells and a perfect shower of arrows.

I felt for an instant a sharp, burning sensation in my left arm, just above the elbow; and, glancing down, discovered an arrow sticking in my shirt sleeve, which I pulled out and threw upon the ground, never dreaming that I had been wounded.

The Navajoes kept riding round as though following a circle, each turn bringing them nearer to us. When directly opposite the camp, they would discharge their arrows at us, and then gallop to a place of safety, out of the range of our revolvers,—returning in a moment, and bending low in their saddles, to send another volley at us.

These tactics were kept up some time, probably as much for the purpose of ascertaining our strength, as to draw our fire; but under Don Rafael's directions, our fire was a most judicious one, and so well calculated to deceive them, that they fairly concluded our numerical force to be much larger than it really was, therefore best a retreat, leaving us masters of the situation. I took particular notice that after we had ascertained this to be the case beyond all question, neither of us manifested any desire to follow them.

Indeed, I am confident that if the doctor or Don Rafael had made a suggestion to that effect, I should not assented to it; but later in the day I had the satisfaction of knowing that there was not the least danger of such a proposition emanating from either of them, for they assured me that had I made it, they would have considered it both unwise and improper.

Once satisfied that our midnight visitors had departed, we began an inquiry into the result of the attack. Briefly, this was the situation:

The doctor and don Rafael had come off without a scratch. I had a slight though troublesome wound in my arm; Jimmy was missing; our wagon-cover had received a dozen or more arrows; but we knew our stock to be all safe in a corral in the pueblo.

No one from the pubelo had come to our assistance, although we were confident that they must have heard and known of the attack. Not a Zuni had we seen; nor could we understand the reason of it, because we knew that the Zunis and the Navajoes had many unsettled feuds, which were rarely permitted to go unnoticed, if an opportunity occurred for redress.

As the doctor was dressing my arm, I remarked to him that it would be a great relief to me to know that Jimmy had been captured by the rascals, for I was thoroughincensed at his absence at such a time; and having made up my mind to no longer endure his persistent disobedience of orders, I would as lief have the matter settled in that way as any other.

The doctor's reply, that neither Navajoes, Apaches, nor devils would never capture him, as his never-failing good luck would bring him safely through, proved true; for just at that moment Don Rafael exclaimed, "See Jimmy comin', quick!" at the same time pointing to the plain.

We looked, and saw coming through the bright moonlight, the coatless, hatless, terrified, flying figure of a man; now running as though borne on the wings of fear, then disappearing for a second, as he fell headlong to the ground, again seemingly on all fours, to again straighten up with a bound that would have done credit to a "jackass rabbit," each moment, however, managing, in spite of his frequent falls, to get nearer the camp, when, with a tremendous burst of speed, splashing the water of the creek high in the air, as he emphatically "went through it," he tumbled headlong into campover the wagon-tongue, his hair standing on end, and with the whitest face I ever saw on mortal man, yelling out, in tones that were fairly screeches, "Howly murther, have they got me?" and dropped to the ground quite insensible.

Our efforts restored him to consciousness after a few moments, when, opening his eyes, and recognizing the doctor, he exclaimed, "Did the divil git you too? Save her, doether!" and again relapsed into insensibility.

It was not until after daylight that we were able to obtain any information relative to Jimmy's mysterious absence from our camp, and his singular return thereto.

From his statements, it seemed that the evening before, by appointment, he had met his fair Zuni charmer, and they had gone out together for a long moonlight stroll; that they had wandered down near the Sacred Spring, when the "gurl" had informed him, by "signs wid fingers," that she wished him to take an "ooath" there.

Now, as Jimmy had drunk at the spring, and no disastrous consequences had yet overtaken him, he reasoned by analogy, that he might take a "lover's oath" there with quite as much impunity as he could drink from it, in any event. So, said Jimmy, "I wuz jist a swearin' misiif, when I heard a noise like thunderin', and I looked up, and there wuz a dozen big sthrappin Injuns jist comin' toards me. And I rin and got behind a big rock, and whin they see the gurl a-standin' there all alone they giv a yill, and one av the nasty divils picked her up, and throwed her acrost his horse, jist like a bag av male, and she yellin' like murther all the time; and thin they stopped a minit, and all rode off together till they wuz clane gone intirely. I wanted to holler, but I didn't shpake a word; I kipt as still as a did man till they wuz all gone, and thin I started as fast as mi legs would bring me for the camp—and I hadn't got but a little ways before I see one av 'em right before me, and, Juge, I'm stone did and gone intirely. What did I iver come into this blasted country wid yez for? You'll save her, won't yez, Juge? Howly murther, how thim divils did rin, tho'; and I've rin ivery stip av the way, mor'n tin miles, be garra, and I'll niver lave the camp again, by the blessed Vargin [crossing himself], till I'm a did man, and have the breath av life in me body. If ye'll get the gurl back, Juge, from thim divils, I'll niver spake to her agin,—boo, boo, boo!" And at this point Jimmy burst into the most lugubrious fit of weeping that any frightened man ever indulged in.

An Honest Policy.

In these days of embezzlement, defalcation and compound felony, the thinking public must needs consider the causes which bring these terribly demoralizing effects. There is no effect without a cause, and many of our honest American citizens would be surprised and indignant at being charged with indirectly causing some of these disgraceful acts by their want of consideration for employes. Not one in ten business men admit to themselves that other labor than their own should be properly compensated—that "the labor is worthy of his hire.", The sole aim of the majority of business men seems to be to achieve wealth, regardless of the claims of their fellow beings. It may be necessary, we grant, for any business man to sail close to the wind in squally weather, but there are times when he bowls along easily and adds largely to his possessions. Then he can well afford to reward faithful employes for their faithfulness.

Very few merchants, even in thought, ever place themselves in the places of their subordinates, who, seeing the rapid strides their employers are making, and contrasting their own condition, see no opening whereby they may be benefitted. Selfishness rules in business to such an extent that it becomes a characteristic. Honorable business is prostituted to attempts of many to outwit those with whom they trade. Shrewdness, sharpness and business capacity are considered one and the same. Seeing this in the conduct of their employers, is it any wonder that employes unconsciously drift into the same characteristics? If evil communications in social matters corrupt good manners, evil communications in business corrupt employers and employes.

Every American seems born with the idea of obtaining wealth, as if that were the most desirable of all things. For this, the average American will deny himself many privileges, always nursing the cankering expectation until it is all-absorbing. For this the father will desert his family and give those who love him best, less and less of his society, leaving them to amuse themselves as best they may, providing little himself—except money. His action taints the atmosphere in which he breathes. The tendency of selfishness is to corruption. The plodding, far-sighted merchant achieves success as years roll on, and doing so has sacrificed his finest feelings. Wealth assured, he treats himself and family more liberally, and envious employes view with envy and discontent the success which they fail of. Underpaid, unencouraged, perhaps bred in a less rigorous school than their employers, the temptation to avail themselves of opportunities for self-advancement is not easily overcome. The policy pursued by many employers is not generally an honest one and is therefore an incitive to dishonesty. The more selfishness, the more tendency to dishonesty and disgrace. All the dishonesty shown does not have this excuse, but a large number of embezzlers is developed by the forgetfulness of the rights of the employed and what is due for faithfulness. When the masses are better appreciated and are considered in some other light than that of the mere use of their brains at as cheap a rate as it is possible to procure them, the day of millenium may come—and with it more heartfelt interest in man as a brother worthy of being encouraged and aided in struggling to obtain something more than a mere existence.

About Liquor Laws.

[Manchester Union.]

The Dover Democrat discusses the liquor question with commendable frankness. While we are glad to agree with much that it says, we are compelled to dissent from some of its conclusions. It claims that itself and the Nashua Telegraph are the only papers in the State which urge "the resolute and impartial enforcement of the prohibitory law;" while some of us "never say much about the law or its enforcement. We belong to this class, for we long ago retired from this field in sheer disgust. We do not believe in the law, but if the crime of liquor-selling is all it is claimed to be, it is still trivial compared with that of men who swear to execute the law and fail to do it. We have seen so much of this—and by the assent and connivance of the friends of the law—that we, wholly powerless to execute or to repeal, have retired in disgustful silence, rather than annoy our readers with unavailing petulence. This is why we "never say much about the law or its enforcement."

The Democrat announces a change of opinion in regard to the prohibitory law, "brought about, mainly," it says, "by the serious consideration of democratic principles." It says: "A State has the right to do any act within its own limits and in relation to its own people, which a sovereignty may have the power to do. In regard to the sale and indulgence of intoxicating liquors, it has the undoubted right to tax, to regulate, or to prohibit absolutely, with whatsoever penalties it may seem fit to impose."

It is true the power of the State is sovereign for local purposes, but then there are things which sovereignty may not rightfully do. We suppose the absolute prohibition of the use of liquor to be one of them. Even the prohibitory law does not absolutely prohibit; and we don't know of anybody who claims that the State may rightfully interdict the sale and use of spirit in all cases.

The Democrat presents a graphic and faithful picture of the evils of intemperance, and adds: "Now, as we have before said, the power of the State is absolute. It has the indubitable right to do any act for the general good of its citizens. Now, will any editor or any reasonable man of any party presume to say that the State has not the right and in fact is not in duty bound to interpose its power to prevent drunkenness? Here is the whole thing in a nut-shell. Now, again, how can it prohibit drunkenness without prohibiting the traffic in that which makes men drunk? If somebody will answer this question, we may possibly gain new light. Such has been the policy of our State, and it is evident that public opinion sustains it because no Legislature elected by the people has yet changed that policy."

What is it that "the public opinion" of our State sustains? The non-enforcement of an existing law? To such "public opinion" we should think our brother would hesitate to appeal.

That the State has a right to act for the good of its citizens is a very safe proposition. That its duty is to prevent drunkenness, so far as it may, is, equally true; but the question still remains—how shall it be done? Our friend answers triumphantly how "without prohibiting the traffic in that which makes men drunk?" This would seem to be conclusive but for the fact, that we have had such prohibition nearly twenty years, and men get drunk more than ever.

The Democrat proceeds to decry the license theory. First, we have the staple objection that we must not license wrong. But it is not wrong to sell good liquor for proper purposes—nobody pretends that it is. Again: "Indiscriminate licensing would be equivalent to legalized universal traffic, with no restrictions upon drunkenness anywhere, while discriminations, giving one man the privilege of doing what another is forbidden to do, would create an outrageous monopoly of wrong." Nobody proposes "indiscriminate licensing;" and it is too clear for argument that "discriminations" are entirely proper, looking to location, character and other attributes.

The present system of free rum everywhere prompts the Democrat to say: "If a man gets drunk, it is not very material whether he does it at a low groggery or at a respectable bar. The drunk is all the same. The fact is, drunkenness generally begins, has its incipient stages, at what are called respectable bars. So this argument in favor of a license system comes to nothing."

However true this is under the present condition, it cannot apply to the license system, which contemplates no drunkenness, and only "respectable bars."

The Democrat proceeds to say that the price of the license comes from the drunkard and lessens the bread and butter of his family; whereas a proper license law would certainly interdict sales to such people.

The question is certainly beset with difficulties. The alternative is this or something better, for there surely can be nothing worse. The evils of rum-selling are increased, and still greater evils inaugurated in the supreme contempt for law, and general indifference in regard to its enforcement. We do not claim that a license law will remedy all the evils complained of; but we do believe it will greatly diminish some of them, and yield a handsome revenue, which will partially compensate for the rest. We have now no law, no reform, and no revenue.

Mr. Bergh's Speciality.

Henry Bergh, the philanthropist, recently addressed the following communication to the secretary of the Evangelical Alliance Conference:"

It will readily be conceded by all members of the Alliance, that it is needless for me to apologize for requesting their consideration of a subject which has its foundation resting on the religion of the Omnipotent Ruler of the World. This being allowed, I am enabled to engage much less of their precious time, while it clears the path which lies before me.

About eight years ago, circumstances of a very impressive character, manifested to me, more than ever, the importance, in a religious, as well as benevolent sense, the necessity of attempting something, for the protection of that vast portion of God's creation, which we recognize under the appellation of "the inferior animals." It was painfully visible to me, that while material comfort, wealth, and luxury, were the inheritance of this land, to an incomparable degree, the sentiment of mercy and compassion towards those humble creatures, was, as a rule, practically ignored. Conscious of the magnitude of this great wrong, inflicted on the civilization of our generation, as well as upon the submissive and dependent brute, I set myself to work, with such feeble means as I found myself possessed of, to effect a reform. I will not detain you by a recital of the numerous and formidable difficulties with which the effort was beset in the beginning; let me rather draw the curtain of oblivion over them, and hold up to your sympathetic gaze, the present spectacle, of twenty-seven States and Territories of our nation, upon the pages of whose law books, gleam, as with electric brilliancy, statutes, declaring that henceforth cruelty, even to the meanest of God's creatures, is denounced. Much as has been done, much yet remains to be performed; and this brings me to the purpose of this communication.

The co-operation of the clergy is required. It is their sacred privilege and advantage to hold communion with, and to influence the moral tendencies of their parishioners more directly and potently than is permitted to others. Let this softening and regenerating power be addressed to them by the preacher, I implore, in the name of our God, our country, and our civilization. Let this subject be offered for their contemplation, through the instrumentality of the eloquent piety of the clergy, as often as may be, under the stern conviction, that no human being, whatever be his devotion to the Most High in other respects, yet, insensible to the cruelties of and sufferings, wantonly imposed on these speechless and indispensible companions of mankind on earth, can ever be considered an acceptable christian in His sight.

To that end I pray that they devote one or more discourses yearly to this work.

The House that Mark Twain Built.

A Hartford correspondent of the Springfield Union writes:

The oddest piece of architecture in this city can be seen out on Farmington avenue, about a mile west of the depot, in a house being built for Mark Twain, who is roughing it in-no-cents abroad (forgive the pun), but who left the plans and contracts in the hands of a prominent builder, who is pushing things rapidly along. The style is indescribable, being a sort of cross between a Mexican abode and a Swiss cottage, built of brick, to cost about $40,000. It stands not far from Governor Jewell's, on the opposite side of the street, on the edge of a hill rather close to the street, where it commands a fine view to the west and north, and is just the sort of house to cause a stranger to stop and inquire, "Who lives in that queer-looking house?" Although the avenue runs east and west, the house, instead of facing the street, faces east. On the north end is a small building, near the street, which contains the kitchen and servants' rooms, separate from the main building, while immediately adjoining is a large dining-room, seventeen by thirty, having but little light, so that when used it will be necessary to light the gas. The parlor is where the kitchen would be located in any other house, while Mark's own room, where most of his time will be spent, is at the top of the house; and, in order to offset the want of light in the dining-room, this room is almost entirely of glass. Take it all in all, it is the queerest piece of architecture one has ever seen, but with one redeeming feature, that is, open fire-places all over the house, and good, generous-sized ones, too.

A Disabling Disease.

No disease which does not confine a man to his bed so completely unfits him for business as dyspepsia. When the stomach is foul, the brain is always muddy and confused, and as the cares and anxieties of life are a sufficient burden for the organ of thought to bear, without being tormented by the miseries born of indigestion, it is highly desirable for the brain's sake, as well as for the sake of every other portion of the system, that the disordered stomach should be restored with the utmost dispatch to a healthy, vigorous condition. This object can always be accomplished by a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the purest and best of vegetable specifics, which evacuates the morbid humors through the bowels, rouses and tones the torpid stomach, and regulates the liver, imparts firmness to the nerves and clears the sensorium of its mental cobwebs. Persons subject to attacks of indigestion, bilious headache, irregularity of the bowels, sickness at the stomach, or "the blues," should take the Bitters once or twice a day throughout the present season.

A TRIUMPH OF MEDICAL ART.

Yes, a triumph we call it, when medicine can be so "fixed up" as to be pleasant to take and yet accomplish the object intended. Such a medicine is Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets, samples of which the writer procured and tested in his own family. The Pellets (little pills) are about one-fifth the size of an ordinary pill, made of highly concentrated root and herbal extracts, and sugar-coated.—Frankfort. (Ind.) Weekly Crescent. 7o1.

MISS M. E. B. MILLER'S

SCHOOL FOR YOUNG LADIES,

No. 6 Daniel Street. o11

Local Matters.

The Catholic Fair.

In consequence of the encouragement received by the managers of the fair at St. Mary's church it is proposed to continue it three evenings of the present week. The church will also be open Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons from three until five o'clock to accommodate those who cannot attend in the evening. Admission 25 cents. For to-night the grand concert by Harlow's Naval Band is announced, and we feel safe in guaranteeing a full house.

On Thursday night a beautiful meerschaum pipe was drawn by William Lynch; a handsome doll by Miss Hynes; a toilette set by James Hall. Friday evening, a picture of Rev. Canon Walsh was drawn by Mrs. David Flynn; a basket of wax flowers by Mrs. Coulon; a plain gold ring by Michael Quinlan; and a fine picture of Father Burke by Wm. C. Ham. Frank W. Miller, Esq., presided at the drawing on Thursday evening, and His Honor, Mayor Marvin, on Friday evening.

Sunday Ordinance.

The city authorities are determined to enforce the Ordinance relative to closing places of business on the Sabbath. The following is a copy of said Ordinance which all will do well to read, and particularly those who have been in the habit of violating the same:

Be it ordained by the City Council of the City of Portsmouth as follows:

SEC. 1. That no person shall keep open any bar-room or place in any hotel, tavern, lodging-house, eating-house or building, for the reception of company, and for selling, exposing for sale or for giving away any intoxicating liquor, merchandise or commodities whatever, on the first day of the week, commonly called the Lord's Day.

SEC. 2. Any person, upon conviction of violating this Ordinance, shall be punished by a fine of not less than five dollars nor more than twenty dollars. (Passed August 3, 1865.)

Laconics.

And now a correspondent of the Rochester Courier has found it necessary to indignantly deny that chromos have been offered for new converts to religion in that town!

Schooner Gertie E. Merrill, Nichols master, arrived at this port from Savannah, Saturday afternoon, with 160,000 feet of hard pine timber to be used by the Philadelphia & Reading Coal and Iron Company in building coal pockets.

David Marshall was brought before Judge Page, Saturday, charged with breaking and entering the confectionery store of Chas. E. Sanborn on Congress street and stealing therefrom cigars valued at $22.50. He was held in the sum of $500 for appearance at the S. J. Court to be holden at Exeter in January.

Since the above was in type we learn that Marshall escaped from the station house on Sunday morning, and is still at large.

William Boynton, a brakeman on the P. & D. R. R., was struck by the draw on Noble's island bridge, while on top of a box car, Saturday afternoon. As the train approached the draw he saw the danger, and endeavored to sit down, but was not quick enough. He was knocked backwards and would have fallen between the cars had a companion not seized and held him. Dr. Norton was called and resuscitated him and dressed his wounds.

The indictment of the Eastern Railroad for the killing of Captain Robert Norton of Boston, formerly of Maine, was procured by Thomas H. Lord of Boston, administrator of Norton's estate, and sets forth that his death was caused by culpable carelessness and negligence at Seabrook. Norton's family reside at Hyde Park. This suit is brought under a special statute, which lays a penalty on a railroad in such cases, in the discretion of the judge, not to exceed $5000, to go to the heirs. The counsel in the case is Albert R. Hatch.

With pleasure we call attention to the fact that Portsmouth has now a tuner and repair of pianos and organs who is permanently located here. The advantage of having a resident tuner will be fully appreciated by the musical public, who in Mr. E. Q. Norton will find a gentleman thoroughly competent to tune and repair any instrument from a harp to a church organ. We understand Mr. Norton is to open a shop for the especial purpose of repairing instruments. See his advertisement for a young man wanted to learn the trade. A good opportunity for some one.

Waxed.

One night at Truckee, California, two young men visiting the same young lady tried to "freeze each other out," or, in other words, to see which would stay the longer. It appears that this is a common amusement at Truckee, and though perhaps pleasant to the young men, is somewhat annoying to the old folks. The Republican tells the story as follows:

The heads of the family left the young people alone at the proper time and retired, apparently for the purpose of rest and slumber. About midnight the young lady expressed a desire to step out on the porch to see the moon and get the fresh air, and of course both the "freezers" followed. The door was closed after them. While moon and star-gazing the man of the house steps unobserved into the parlor and distributes a liberal supply of shoemaker's wax on two of the seats of the cane-bottomed chairs—those that the men had vacated. This wax was of the right consistency to serve the purpose in this case. The young lady on the porch, who was in the secret, soon found an excuse for returning with her admirers. The young men sank down again into the "reserved seats," and each redoubled his efforts to please the damsel, annoy his fellow, and keep awake. About an hour passed in this way, by which time the wax, aided by the warmth pressing down upon it, had become thoroughly amalgamated with the shoddy of the pants—in fact, the cane bottoms of the chairs, the wax and the pantaloons became a sort of inseparable trinity. The time for the crisis was close at hand. It came. Each one of the bachelors found himself glued to his seat, and no amount of pulling and tugging effected a release. If they arose the chairs followed. At first they tried to look upon the matter as a joke, but after a full half-hour's struggle to free themselves from their embarassing predicament, they began to think they had got into a serious scrape. The lady suggested that they build up a rousing fire in the stove, and then, each man backing up as near the heat as possible, "melt the darned stuff off," as she said. This method was tried, but didn't work, as with the chairs fastened to them they couldn't get near enough to the fire. After they had sweat in the heated room for about an hour to no purpose, the wax retaining its relentless grip and connection, they saw no way out of their awkward dilemma except to engage in a surgical operation. It was getting along toward morning, and daylight was near at hand. They realized that whatever was to be done must be done quickly. Their jack-knives were brought into requisition, and in a few minutes each fellow was released from his uncomfortable position. They left the young lady and the house in a hasty and unceremonious manner, with a cane patch on the rear of their numentionables about the size of a full moon. Freeze-out games are not as popular as they were.

—The Seneca Falls ladies are singing about "the moth-eaten bustle, the old iron-bustle, the cloth-covered bustle that hung on so well."

Portsmouth Chronicle.

A Murder Story Interrupted.

A little more than a week ago there was published a telegraphic report of two murders committed in Carrolton, Mo., the victims being a woman of previously high repute and a young man of the most respectable connections in that locality. The perpetrator of the deed, Robert Austin, who was the husband of the woman murdered, is also of the best society there, and these facts very naturally heightened the interest in the case. And now, before the edge of the primary horror has been dulled by the gossip of the neighborhood, there comes a well-authenticated and exceedingly peculiar verification of the story, which greatly intensifies the effects of the first reports. In North Leavenworth, Kan., there resides a widow of a deceased brother of Robert Austin, who at her home on the night of the murders was roused from her affrighted slumbers by the terrible sensations produced by belief that she witnessed the entire murder scene. She told the horrible tale of what she had seen to her neighbors next morning; among them to her physician, who said she was bilious and gave her medicine. Soon afterwards the report of the murders appeared, precisely as she had described them. And now this strange fact exceeds the murders in the interest it creates.

'73 REUNION.

THE "HISTORY OF THE RETURN OF THE SONS & DAUGHTERS OF PORTSMOUTH, JULY, 1873," is just published. It contains 96 pages, octavo, and is a thorough detail of everything relating to the three Festa; Days,

The Reunion, July 4th,
High School Reunion, 5th,
The Praise Meeting, 6th;

and containing a

Verbatim Report

of every speech that was uttered at the Tent on the 4th and 5th, besides giving a full report of all the Reunion preliminary movements in Portsmouth, Boston and New York. Much of the matter of this work has never yet appeared in any form, and we think it will prove interesting to all who participated in the

The Singer Still Triumphant!

At the Vienna Exhibition, the SINGER received the Medal of Merit, the Medal of Progress, and three other Medals for superiority of productions. These are the highest Sewing Machine Awards at Vienna. The Singer received all the medals awarded to either of the competing machines, and two medals more than any other obtained. Then, in the name of Truth, what is it that prompts people to claim recommendations for the Diploma of Honor? The fact is, no Diploma of Honor has been given to any Sewing Machine Company.

But immeasurably more valuable is The World's Award as shown by sales—proved by sworn returns to the owners of the principal Sewing Machine Patents—which last year amounted to TWO HUNDRED AND SIXTEEN THOUSAND, SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHT (216,758) machines, nine out of ten of them being for Family Use. This is over 45,000 more Sewing Machines than were sold by any other company during the same period, and over One Quarter of all the machines sold in 1872. These enormous sales are owing to the long-tested merits of the Singer Machines, which meet the wants of the public in excellency and simplicity of construction, and capability for great variety and excellence of work. That the users of Sewing Machines find these desirable qualities in the singer beyond all others, is shown by the sales above given, aside from the awards of International Juries, either at home or abroad.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, DROPSY AND HUMORS.

PERUVIAN SYRUP

Makes The Weak Strong.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an albumen, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building upon an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids need reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

By a timely resort to this standard remedy, as is proved by hundreds of testimonials received by the proprietors.

Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry

Does not dry up a Cough and leave the cause behind as is the case with most preparations, but it loosens and cleanses the lungs and allays irritation, thus removing the cause of the complaint.

CLERGYMEN, LAWYERS, SINGERS,

And all those whose occupation requires an unusual exercise of the vocal organs, will find this the ONLY PREPARATION which will effectually and instantaneously relieve their difficulties.

BEWARE OF COUNTERFEITS.—Remember that the genuine Wistar's Balsam has on the outside wrapper the signature of "I. BUTTS," and the printed name of the proprietors, "SETH W. FOWLE & SONS, Boston." All others are base imitations. Examine the wrapper carefully before purchasing.

HAVING contracted for a quantity of the above coal, we would call the attention of Manufacturers, Dealers and Consumers to the following different grades mined and controlled by the Company:
HARD WHITE ASH COAL,
FREE BURNING WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN RED ASH COAL,

LYKENS VALLEY COAL.
In order that all coal shall be shipped in good order, a most rigid system of inspection, both at the mines and at the shipping ports, will at all times be enforced. In every district of the coal region there will be appointed a number of competent persons skilled in the preparation of coal, as local inspectors, whose duty it will be to visit the several collieries daily to see that a proper force is at all times employed in removing slate, and to prevent, if possible, any coal being sent from the mines in bad order. In addition to these efforts at prevention, no means will be left untried at the shipping ports to cure the evils of careless preparation. At Schuylkill Haven, Port Clinton and Port Richmond, ALL COAL WILL BE SUBJECTED TO THE PERSONAL EXAMINATION OF A SKILLED INSPECTOR BEFORE IT IS SHIPPED, and if condemned by him, will be dumped in places provided for the purpose, and before being loaded into vessels WILL BE THOROUGHLY REPICKED AND CLEANED BY HAND.

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS,
For all the Purposes of a Family Physic
CURING
Costiveness, Jaundice, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Dysentery, Foul Stomach and Breath, Erysipelas, Headache, Piles, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Tetter, Tumors and Salt Rheum, Worms, Gout, Neuralgia, as a Dinner Pill, and purifying the Blood, are the most congenial purgative yet perfected. Their effects abundantly show how much they excel all other Pills. They are safe and pleasant to take, but powerful to cure. They purge out the foul humors of the blood; they stimulate the sluggish or disordered organ into action, and they impart health and tone to the whole being. They cure not only the every-day complaints of everybody, but formidable and dangerous diseases. Most skilful physicians, most eminent clergymen, and our best citizens send certificates of cures performed, and of great benefits they have derived from these Pills. They are the safest and best physic for children, because mild as well as effectual. Being sugar-coated, they are easy to take; and being purely vegetable, they are entirely harmless.

Daily Chronicle.

Danbury News.

Even the broadest intellect and the most experienced management occasionally makes a failure. There was an Italian at the fair selling red balloons. Whenever he took up a position it was known by the cluster of red balls swinging above his head. It was while making change for a customer that he put the string which held his wares in his mouth, and it was while the string was thus secured that he undertook to make an observation on the general appearance of the weather, and an ascension immediately followed. At 4:30 P. M. he took the train for Italy.

A New Fairfield citizen was awakened the other night by a disturbance among his hens, and got up to punish the thieves. His wife got up, too, as a matter of course, and immediately fell the whole length of a flight of stairs, which is also not to be wondered at. An examination revealed the coop intact, the hens merely waking to turn over, or having been troubled with dreams of an unpleasant nature. As the nearest man lived two miles away, the feelings of the hen-owner can better be imagined than described.

The season approaches when the boy of the period turns his mind to meditation. As the hour of 8 P. M. strikes, he softly withdraws from the table where he has been engaged in digging the putty from the nail head, and unostentatiously deposits himself back of the stove to think. We are particular to emphasize this word, because there is an impression on the part of his parents, and his eldest sister, who has the honor of escorting him to bed nights, that he is going to sleep. They go so far as to openly express this belief, but he stoutly denies it, and immediately proceeds to demonstrate the gross injustice of the insinuation by humming some familiar piece. Pretty soon the humming ceases; there is a significant movement at the table, and then it is resumed again, and continues for five minutes, when it gradually dies out, and all is silent back of the stove. When the boy comes to again he is being lifted to his feet by his waistband, and cuffed on the head to indicate that it is after ten o'clock. He makes a desperate attempt to find where he left off on the tune, but ignominiously fails, and five minutes later is tumbling up stairs, with an interested and active sister in his rear, and firmly but faintly maintaining that he was not asleep, but only thinking.

What a sympathetic cough that is which people have in church. There is a noticeable silence upon the congregation. Nothing is heard but the low, measured tones of the service. There is no other movement or sound in the building. Suddenly in the southeast corner there is a timid hack from a human throat. Thus emboldened, some one coughs a little louder, and he is followed by some one with more courage still, and in an instant there is a perfect whirlwind of coughing, spitting and wheezing all round the room. You find yourself joining in, although you have felt no desire to clear your throat, and are surprised at the relief you experience. The storm subsides as suddenly as it arose, and an expressive lull follows. Then the skirmishers start up again; pop, pop, pop, go the reports, first in one direction, and then in another, and a general engagement at once comes off. What is still more remarkable than this battle of the tonsils, is the impenetrable mystery which surrounds the individuality of the first cougher. He is like the man saved by patent medicine. You know there is such a party, although you may never hope to meet him, on account of the great distance of his town.

Hoosier Idioms.

A resident of a few years in Southern Indiana has accustomed his ear to idioms; but, among others, those contained in the following sound a little strange:

If you desired to be called at an early hour in the morning, your host will promise to call you "right soon," and may ask you if you want to rise before "sun up." If you order breakfast at a hotel at an unusually early hour, you are likely to be told that they "don't reckon" they can get it that soon. You enter a hack and tell the driver to hurry, and it is more than likely that he will tell you that there is a heap of holes in the road, and he "allows" it won't be safe to go fast, because he has to "watch out right smart" now. It may be that the wheel of the carriage may strike a stone, and if so coachee will be likely to exclaim, "Doggon that rock."

The domestic article which Bostonians call a "bawsket" gets flattened out into a "baisket" here. A frying-pan becomes a skillet, and all distinctions between buckets and pails are leveled to the standard of the former. Household goods are "moving plunder," even in the way-bills and manifests of steamers. A set of harness is "a pair of gears," and what is strange in this pork-raising country is the absence of pigs. There are none here. They are little hogs, or "hawgs" as popular pronunciation has it. Water is stronger with us than with you, for the Hoosier puts more to it, and makes it "watter," and by a similar error of pronunciation your daughter becomes a "dotter."

A newspaper carrier "packs papers," a tale bearer "packs lies," and a young gentleman "carries his sweetheart to the opera;" but let the piece be ever so funny they do not laugh, they "laif." A shiftless fellow is often described as the "trifinest, no countest" fellow alive, and, if he is crabbed he is called contrary. If he is destitute of beauty, he is "ugly." Things that are hard in New England are "haurd" here. Cards become cords, and I have heard a child at school spell y-a-r-d yord without being corrected.

They will tell you that the chills leave one "powerful weak," and a Hoosier never dislikes to take medicine; he "dispises to take it;" and when you are in vigorous health they will understand you best if you say you are "right peart."

A Hoosier "allows" to raise a "right smart" of corn, where a Yankee would "calculate" on having a large quantity, and he also "allows" where a Yankee intends. When one leaves any place suddenly, he is said to "lite out," or have "lit out," and having arrived at the proper place I too will "lite out."

The True Remedy.

The safest of all business conditions is not to owe. He who is out of debt is independent, and to be independent, though poor, is to be removed from fear of loss. The credit system saps the foundations of all business. Those who incur debt recklessly will be liable to repudiate their agreements at convenience. Too many business men step beyond their depth, and when a single failure which excites the business world occurs, with fear and trembling they await its effects on themselves. The surest way to allay fears and suspicions of danger is the speedy settlement of liabilities. No safer motto than "pay as you go" can be followed in business. Were the small debts throughout the nation paid, the large debts would be dreaded, as affecting few people. To hoard money when a creditor needs it is destructive to business. Ambition is honorable, but when it leads men to speculate with that which is not their own, it is demoralizing. Many do it unthinkingly in their greed for gain, who would shudder at the thought of borrowing it without leave from a bank or railroad. The law protects the debtor too much in allowing him to postpone the payments of just debts when he is able.

The panic in stocks is a lamentable exhibition of the ruin the present system of credit is liable at any time to bring. Legitimate business comes to a stand-still in some cases because so intimately connected with the fortunes of millionaires affected by the rash speculation in the stock market. The heavy operator owes his neighbors, holds fifty-fold more stock than he can pay for, and borrows from money lenders the wherewithal for more "margins," instead of selling and paying up. Some time the [illegible] creditor, the latter cannot meet his engagements with the banks, stocks fall, real estate depreciates, manufactories suspend, workmen are thrown out of employment, and the nation feels a shock which paralyzes its best interests. Were debts promptly paid, such disastrous failures as those of the past six weeks would be fewer, and to pay the larger debts, the smaller ones should first be cancelled. He who pays a debt, however small, acts rightly in the direction which all business men would appreciate and profit by were it a system more generally observed.

The Denver News says: "A band of 300 clergymen are on the frontier, and after a successful raid, they will retreat to their reservation, carrying their scalps and plunder with them, to enjoy, under the protection of a Government post, a feast and a war-dance, for which the pioneer citizens of Colorado furnish both the scalps and the food. Comment on such a state of affairs is useless." The compositor who would make "clergymen" out of "Cheyennes" deserves to be scalped without benefit of clergy.

In the late base-ball championship series, just closed, the Athletics of Philadelphia were the only club that won five of the nine games played with the Bostons. The Bostons won 9 from the Washingtons, 8 from the Athletics, 7 from the Baltimores, 6 from the Mutuals, 5 from the Philadelphias, and 4 from the Athletics—39 in all. The Philadelphias won 36 and have two to play.

The authorities of Plymouth Church have taken up the Beecher scandal case, with a view to thorough investigation. The charges against Theodore Tilton are to be first proceeded with. The proceedings will be private.

Tammany Hall has come to grief again. The Tammanyites felt so strong that at the democratic State convention in New York they would not admit the Apollo Hall delegation. The New York board of aldermen had a majority in favor of Tammany and Apollo over the republican aldermen, and had refused to confirm nominations for new police justices made in June by Mayor Havemayer. On Saturday, the revengeful Apollo democrats deserted their old allies and, uniting with the republican members, confirmed the Mayor's nominations. This action squelches the last vestige of Tammany rule in New York city and retires Judges Cox, Ledwith, Shandley, McQuade, Scott, Hogan, Dowling and Coulter, who were members of the old "ring."

A prominent New York democrat says he "never left his party but once, and that was when the country was in peril." This reminds the Buffalo Express of the solemn oath of the home guards of Bunkumville, who swore "never to desert their native town unless it was invaded by the enemy." But what do the people say about giving power to a party which its own members and nominees admit cannot be trusted in case of national danger?

Old Time Chronicles, No. 91.

BY UNCLE JOSEPH.

WASHINGTON IN NEW HAMPSHIRE. The first Presidential voting, I suppose, was late in 1788 or early in 1789. The Electors voted in 1799. Number of votes 69; all for George Washington. The Electors in our State were Pickering and Parker of Portsmouth, Sullivan and Thompson of Durham and Bellows of Walpole. The seat of government was New York city, where Washington was inaugurated, April 30, 1789. Congress was in session and continued most if not all of the time till Sept. 29.

A few days later the President left for a visit to New England. He arrived in Newburyport, Oct. 30. At 8, 31, he left for Portsmouth. At the State line between Salisbury and Seabrook, he was met by Gen. John Sullivan, Governor of the State, some of the Council, John Langdon and Mr. Wingate of the Senate, other distinguished gentlemen, and one or more companies of militia mounted and in good uniform. This cavalcade, with the President, made a short stop at the Gov. Weare house, in Hampton Falls. The Governor was dead, but his daughter, Mrs. Porter, performed the honors of reception.

The party proceeded on soon after 12 o'clock through Hampton. The people were out in large numbers to see the President. It was 84 years ago. Mrs. Dolly Leavitt of North Hampton, then a child of 4 or 5 years living in Hampton, has told us that she recollects seeing him as he passed, bowing right and left to the citizens.

At Greenland the party was met by an independent company of cavalry; then at the Plains in Portsmouth quite a number of military offiers were drawn up in command of Gen. Joseph Cilley of Nottingham to salute him as he passed. The President had left his carriage before this, and was mounted on his horse.

The arrival in the compact part of the town was a little before 3 o'clock. The bells were rung, three companies of artillery discharged their guns, and while the President was passing through Congress street there was a salute from the Fort.

Gov. Sullivan soon conducted the President to the State House, where from the balcony he received the salutes of the people, and the militia passed in review in command of Gen. Cilley. Odes were sung and in all possible ways the President was honored.

Sabbath came. The President was an Episcopalian, and in the forenoon he attended service at Queen's Chapel, now St. John's Church. The minister was Rev. J. C. Ogden. In the afternoon he attended at the North Church and heard a discourse from Rev. Dr. Buckminster. In this church, President Washington was seated in a wall pew next to the pulpit as the church then was. It is said he gave the strictest attention to the discourse.

Monday, with Gen. Sullivan he went down the river in a barge rowed by oarsmen dressed in white. Another barge followed by oarsmen in blue jackets. A band of music accompanied. They landed in Kittery, but without much stop, proceeded round to Little Harbor and called at the quaint house once occupied by the Provincial Governor, Benning Wentworth; then up to town by land.

On Tuesday, there was a public reception of officers, clergy and bar. While he was in town also a committee gave him the congratulations of the town. The address was by Judge Pickering. The President made a reply in elegant language.

The President stopped at Col. Brewster's Hotel. This stood on the site afterward occupied by the late Richard Jenness. He called at Hon. John Langdon's, afterward Governor, one evening and took supper. He thought his house among the finest in town.

The President went no further east, and on Wednesday, Nov. 4, he left town without parade, went through Greenland and Stratham to Exeter. Many in the streets of that town saw him, but he did not stop long. Next on to Kingston and Plaistow, and then to Haverhill, Mass. While in Kingston, he was met by two gentlemen of Haverhill on horseback, and two young ladies in a chaise. They had heard that he was not to pass through Haverhill and started for Exeter to see him. They were surprised and overjoyed and in their excitement the ladies turned their horse suddenly and were both thrown out of the carriage. Washington said: "I hope, young ladies, you are not injured." They assured him they were not. He congratulated them and went forward.

Portsmouth did itself honor as well as honoring the President in the reception it gave him. But an outline has been given. It has received other Presidents since as perhaps Monroe in 1817, although we have not information of this. President Polk was received in 1847, and President Pierce in 1857, but the reception of Washington was grandly carried out for that early time.

State News.

The Manchester Union is distressed about the condition of New Hampshire, and desires to know if it is too late to save the State! We are not aware that the commonwealth was in any peril, but are of opinion that were there fewer political farmers and farming politicians in it, there might be less reason for the Union's fears.

The now famous case of Palmer vs. the city of Concord, a suit brought against the city to recover damages for property destroyed by a mob in August, 1861, which has been on trial a week in a special term of the supreme judicial court, was given to the jury at one o'clock on Saturday, and they returned a verdict for the city.

The great celebration of the incorporation of the old town of Dunstable, once including Nashua, Hollis, Hudson, Dunstable, and portions of Amherst, Brookline, Pepperell, Townsend, Groton, Chelmsford, Tyngsborough, Westford, Pelham, Londonderry, Litchfield and Merrimack, came off at Nashua, on Sunday, the exercises on Monday being interfered with by the storm. Sunday afternoon services were held in Yale's tent, 5000 people attending.

A Slipper Story.

[Danbury News.]

We see by the Troy Whig that Frank D. Hartfield, the agent for the soap-house of McKeon, Van Haaggen & Co., has received a vote of thanks from the Board of Aldermen of that city for a gift of soap. Mr. Hartfield is appreciated in Troy, and had better stay there. At least, he should keep away from Danbury. Several weeks ago some of his soap was left at a house on Liberty street, where it gave satisfaction, we learn. Two weeks later, the lady of the house bought a box of fancy soaps of the same manufacture. The cakes were of three colors—yellow, white, and pink. She took the box home, and meant to have laid it away; but it caught the eye of her child, some three years old, and so exercised the throat of the youngster that she was obliged to give up the box and the contents. Subsequently, being engaged in baking, she lost sight of the affair. In the meantime the child looked over the box, and finding the contents to be unusually attractive, undertook to eat them, but failing in this, used them as blocks for laying out townships, erecting towers, and performing a variety of other engineering feats. Pretty soon it fell to knocking them down with its hand, and to kicking them around the room with its foot, and when this amusement lost its attraction, it suddenly set up a dreadful howl of agony, and started for the kitchen. It was about this time that the man of the house, who had been abed up stairs, came down stairs in pants and shirt to get some shaving water. When within four steps of the bottom, he stepped on something which immediately disappeared with astonishing celerity, and deposited him on the floor below without the aid of the other steps. He got up on his feet at once, and looked about for the cause of the accident. It was a cake of soap. He picked it up, and with wonderful presence of mind, hurled it through the glass of the first window. Then he gathered up the shaving cup and brush, and went into the room. He went into it just as any man would who had missed four steps in coming down stairs; and lighting on another cake just as he was about to kick the door shut, that leg shot away so violently as to hurt the roof of his mouth, and he came down on one knee, with his head against the bureau. The top of his scalp was somewhat bruised, and one drawer was without its completion of knobs, and he had bitten a piece from the tip of his tongue, although no one would have suspected that last by the flow of conversation that followed as he bounded to his feet. The appearance of his wife, with her face depicting emotions of the liveliest alarm, was welcomed as a providential escape-valve for the wrath boiling within him, but he found his rage turning to astonishment as he saw her suddenly change her motion, and dash toward him with her head down and uttering a hysterical scream. As the instinct of self-preservation is the loudest, he immediately proceeded to move out of the way of his sliding spouse, when he encountered another cake of soap, and was twisted completely around, and hurled headlong against the centre-table, and immediately across her line of march. What became of her or the centre-table in the crash that followed he cannot tell. He remembers when striking the table of seeing some twenty-five new planets, with a pyrotechnic display in the back-ground, and thinks he must have heard a million firecrackers go off under a barrel. When he came to, he was abed in a darkened room with two persons whispering in a corner, and the air thoroughly impregnated with a flavor of castor oil. If Mr. Hatfield can obtain reasonable board in Troy within five minutes' walk of the depot and post-office, he will find it a bargain.

—"She who rocks the cradle rules the world," was a neat phrase that had its birth in the Woman's Congress.

A prominent feature of this magazine is its copyright novelettes, two of which appear in this number, "Theo," by Miss Hodgson, and "The Lost Inheritance," by Mrs. Ann S. A Balloon Story.

In these balloon days we are reminded of an extraordinary ascension made during the war in Northern Ohio. The aeronaut had gone up frequently; was accounted courageous and sagacious in his business, and had such amiable and sterling qualities as to render him highly esteemed. He seems to have been blessed, or cursed, with a very pretty wife, to whom he was devotedly attached. As frequently happens, she did not love him in return—at least not enough to insure her loyalty. She permitted her ardent affections to wander, and those who knew informed him of their well-grounded suspicions. Too generous to believe, too chivalrous to doubt, he continued to repose the fullest faith in his consort, until at last the dreadful conviction was forced upon him. Even then he gave no intimation that he had discovered her guilty secret, though some of his friends were confident he had. He advertised another balloon voyage, and, at the time named, all was prepared. His wife was in the enclosure, and just before he stepped into the car, he went to her side, kissed her tenderly, saying that he hoped Heaven would make her happy; that he loved her so much that he would not for a moment stand between her and peace. His words had such significance that the blood started to her face and tears to her eyes. Ere she could collect herself he was in the basket, the ropes were cut and he was shooting through the air.

Days, weeks, months passed, and the popular aeronaut was not heard from, nor were there any tidings of the balloon. It was universally supposed that he had met with a fatal accident; that he had probably gone so high that the silken bag had burst, and destroyed his life. More than a year after fragments of a skeleton, with bits of clothing, were found on the shore of Lake Erie; also the remains of a gold watch, bearing the initials of the missing aeronaut. The mystery was then solved. He had ascended with the deliberate intent of leaping from the balloon at a certain elevation, knowing that by such means he would escape the suspicion of suicide, and he deliberately carried out his desperate determination.

This was an instance of chivalry which it would be difficult to excel. Romance does not surpass it, nor poetry either. The man who sacrificed himself out of pure love, though for the illicit passion of his wife, never imagined that he was a hero, and yet not in history or fiction are greater heroes shown. His was one of the many instances of nobleness and devotion which pass away unrecognized, because no eloquent pen records their virtues and no inspired singer sings them.

—A French gentleman, learning English to some purpose, replied thus to the salutation:

"How do you do, monsieur?"
"Do vat?"
"How do you find yourself?"
"I never lose myself."
"How do you feel?"
"Smooth; you just feel me."
"Good morning, monsieur!"
"Good! No, it's a bad one; it's vet and nasty."

Business Notices.

A Disabling Disease.

No disease which does not confine a man to his bed so completely unfits him for business as dyspepsia. When the stomach is foul, the brain is always muddy and confused, and as the cares and anxieties of life are a sufficient burden for the organ of thought to bear, without being tormented by the miseries born of indigestion, it is highly desirable for the brain's sake, as well as for the sake of every other portion of the system, that the disordered stomach should be restored with the utmost dispatch to a healthy, vigorous condition. This object can always be accomplished by a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the purest and best of vegetable specifics, which evacuates the morbid humors through the bowels, rouses and tones the torpid stomachs and regulates the liver, imparts firmness to the nerves and clears the sensorium of its mental cobwebs. Persons subject to attacks of indigestion, bilious headache, irregularity of the bowels, sickness at the stomach, or "the blues," should take the Bitters once or twice a day throughout the present season.

A TRIUMPH OF MEDICAL ART.

Yes, a triumph we call it, when medicine can be so "fixed up" as to be pleasant to take and yet accomplish the object intended. Such a medicine is Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets, samples of which the writer procured and tested in his own family. The Pellets (little pills) are about one-fifth the size of an ordinary pill, made of highly concentrated root and herbal extracts, and sugar-coated.—Frankfort. (Ind.) Weekly Crescent. 7gl.

A large class of singers has been formed under the tuition of Prof. E. S. Metcalf who is a faithful, painstaking teacher and courteous gentleman. A cordial invitation is extended to all advanced singers who desire, to be present and join the class this (Tuesday) evening at fifteen minutes betore eight o'clock.

A resident of Portsmouth who visited Boston on business a few days ago, thinks he played a capital joke on the thief who picked his pocket of a large wallet, by his habit of never carrying money in a pocket-book. Several bulky but unimportant letters, a few postal cards and stamps, and a shocking bad photograph of the visitor, were all the valuables captured by the city expert,—hardly enough to pay the latter's lodging bill for one night at a police station.

Worked to Death.

Cyrus Wakefield, Esq., died in Wakefield, Mass., Sunday morning, of apoplexy. He was a very successful business man and was weighed down with the immense responsibilities of the enterprises he was engaged in. The Boston Advertiser says he had become a very large holder of real estate, which was almost without exception heavily mortgaged. The only effect that the panic had upon him was to increase the rates which he was compelled to pay for money. In some cases, it is said, he was paying as high as three per cent. Anxiety on this account in addition to the rumors of his insolvency affected him very much, and for days he had seemed very much pressed and nervous. On Sunday morning he complained of a severe pain across his chest and shortly after was found dead in his chair. Mr. Wakefield was born in Roxbury, N. H., in 1811. He was the largest stockholder in the Boston & Maine Railroad.

At the beginning of the war he was in the East India importing business. The war came nearly carrying him under, but one of the Boston banks, which had always been regarded as his backer, took his stock of rattan and loaned him money. He was then thought to be worth about $70,000. The rattan, which was a drug on his hands at three cents, when the demand came was the only stock in the country, and he realized upon it at the rate of eighteen to twenty-three cents. From this dated his prosperity. He saw his opportunity and seized it. He got the monopoly of the rattan trade and soon was known as the heaviest importer of East India goods in the country. The business grew wonderfully, until, as is estimated by men who did business with him, and in whom he confided, the legitimate profits were from eight hundred to a thousand dollars a day.

One of his investments was the Wakefield Real Estate and Building Company, of which he was president, and held over 1000 shares. The original capital of the company was $100,000, but last year a stock dividend of $100,000 was declared. There is a large surplus on hand, and the company is regarded as in excellent condition. He was an extensive owner of real estate in Boston, particularly in the neighborhood of Haymarket square, and had recently made heavy real estate investments in other parts of the city. He bought the Boston Studio Building over a year ago for something like $480,000, but in the first year he paid only $20,000, and in all, we believe, has not paid over $50,000. He was a shareholder in the Music Hall corporation, but not, as was generally supposed, having a controlling or even a large interest. His purchases on the line of the Washington street extension were immense. He had in anticipation of the improvement purchased the Quincy House, the old Brattle-square Church, the City Hotel and Central House and contiguous property through to Hanover street, with a view to the erection of an immense hotel. But these estates are so heavily mortgaged that good financiers question if they would bring more than their equation if sold at once.

It is rumored that he bequeathed his rattan works to his nephew in the East Indies, who now has changed his business there. The estimates of the value of his estate are conflicting, some stating that it will amount to at least two and a half millions, and others who appear to be thoroughly conversant with his affairs express the belief that he will be found to be insolvent. He leaves a wife, a most estimable lady, but no children.

Portsmouth Chronicle.

At a meeting of the Evangelical Alliance in New York city, Mr. Henry Bergh spoke in substance as follows: "What audacity for him to appear in these holy walls! Was he mad? Yes, but not in the sense of lunacy. Creation is tortured in every way that inhuman man can devise. He did not wish to be considered censorious, but he must say that the clergy are far behind the people in this movement. This idea of protecting brutes is a corner-stone of the christian religion. Eight years ago brutes were considered only as property. Feeling sensible of the error he undertook the initiative of reform. Now twenty-seven States have societies similar to his own. On the opposite corner stands the handsome office of the society, while we have in the bank over half a million in funds. When the epizootic visited us last winter we found how dependent we were upon the horse alone." Mr. Bergh was applauded at the conclusion.

—Things were affecting at Iowa City on election night. The Press man corralled Brainard of the Republican, the Postmaster and his partner, in a fire-brigade saloon, singing:

I want to be a granger,
And with the grangers stand—
A horsey-headed farmer,
With a hay-stack in my hand;

and anon, his partner, a nice young man, with a good voice, joins in:

Beneath the tall tomato tree
I'll swing the glittering hoe—
And smite the wild potato-bug
As he skips o'er the snow.

I've bought myself a Durham ram
And a gray alpaca cow,
A lock-stitch Osage orange hedge,
And a patent-leather plough.

'73 REUNION.

THE "HISTORY OF THE RETURN OF THE SONS & DAUGHTERS OF PORTSMOUTH, JULY, 1873," is just published. It contains 96 pages, octavo, and is a thorough detail of everything relating to the three Festal Days.

The Reunion, July 4th,
High School Reunion, 5th,
The Praise Meeting, 6th;

and containing a

Verbatim Report

of every speech that was uttered at the Tent on the 4th and 5th, besides giving a full report of all the Reunion preliminary movements in Portsmouth, Boston and New York. Much of the matter of this work has never yet appeared in any form, and we think it will prove interesting to all who participated in the Three Days' Jubilee.

The work is for sale at the Chronicle Office, J. H. Foster's Bookstore, and at Wm. R. Preston's.

The Singer Still Triumphant!

At the Vienna Exhibition, the SINGER received the Medal of Merit, the Medal of Progress, and three other Medals for superiority of productions. These are the highest Sewing Machine Awards at Vienna. The SINGER received all the medals awarded to either of the competing machines, and two medals more than any other obtained. Then, in the name of Truth, what is it that prompts people to claim recommendations for the Diploma of Honor? The fact is, no Diploma or Medal has been given to any Sewing Machine Company.

But immeasurably more valuable is The World's Award as shown by sales—proved by sworn returns to the owners of the principal Sewing Machine Patents—which last year amounted to TWO HUNDRED AND NINETEEN THOUSAND, SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHT (219,758) machines, nine out of ten of them being for Family Use. This is over 45,000 more Sewing Machines than were sold by any other company during the same period, and over The Quarter of all the machines sold in 1872. These enormous sales are owing to the long-tested merits of the Singer Machines, which need the waste of the public in superiority and simplicity of construction, and capability for great variety and extensive range of work. That the users of Sewing Machines find these desirable qualities in the Singer beyond all others, is shown by the sales above given, aside from the awards of International Juries, either at home or abroad.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, DROPSY AND HUMORS.

PERUVIAN SYRUP

Makes The Weak Strong.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damaged and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building upon an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

R. H. EDDY, SOLICITOR OF PATENTS,

For Inventions, Trade Marks or Designs.

No. 76 STATE ST., OPPOSITE KILBY ST., BOSTON.

After an extensive practice of upwards of thirty years, continues to secure patents in the United States; also in Great Britain, France and other foreign countries. Caveats, Specifications, Assignments, and all papers for Patents, executed on reasonable terms with dispatch. Researches made to determine the validity and utility of Patents of Inventions, and legal and other advice rendered in all matters touching the same. Copies of the claims of any patent furnished, by remitting one dollar. Assignments recorded in Washington.

No Agency in the United States possesses superior facilities for obtaining Patents or ascertaining the patentability of inventions.

All necessity for a journey to Washington to procure a Patent and the usual great delay there, are here saved inventors.

TESTIMONIALS.

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse. CHARLES MASON, Commissioner of Patents."

"I have no hesitation in assuring inventors that they cannot employ a man more competent and trustworthy and more capable of putting their applications in a form to secure for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office. EDMUND BURKE, Late Commissioner of Patents."

"Mr. R. H. EDDY has made for me over THIRTY applications for Patents, having been successful in almost every case. Such unmistakable proof of great talent and ability on his part leads me to recommend all inventors to apply to him to procure their Patents; as they may be sure of having the most faithful attention bestowed on their cases and at very reasonable charges. Daily Chronicle.

Saved to be Lost.

I was stopping at the Hotel Windsor, at Rue de Rivoli, Paris. One morning I was smoking in the colonnade, when a tall, elegantly dressed gentleman asked permission to light his cigar by mine. I saw at once that he was a Frenchman, although his "English" was nearly perfect.

"Have you heard the news?" he inquired.

"No."

"Is it possible! Why, all Paris is alive with it at this moment."

"What has happened!"

"The Countess de Marville, the fairest of the fair, was found murdered in her bed last night, her bureau broken open and ten thousand francs missing from it. It was terrible! The brute who did the deed effected his entrance through the window of her chamber, near which, unfortunately, was a tall tree planted by the distinguished grandfather of the Countess years ago. Little did he imagine what a terrible use would be made of it."

"This is bad news. How any man could harm a woman thus in cold blood is more than I can imagine."

"Ah, monsieur, if you had ever seen the Countess you would wonder still more. She was beautiful—beautiful as an angel," he added, stroking his whiskers with an unmistakable air of vanity; "I knew her well."

"Indeed."

"Oh, yes. There are in Paris few popular women unknown to me."

His manner now was decidedly conceited, and I felt disgusted. My coldness evidently repelled him, for he soon left me. Afterward I heard from others accounts of the late tragedy. Among the details of the affair was one which peculiarly impressed me—and which my first informant had not spoken of—an oversight which surprised me, as the occurrence he had not mentioned was of that kind which would be most apt to strike the fancy. Upon the throat of the Countess the murderer, in throttling her, had left a mark from a ring he wore—the impression of a chariot wheel with a star in the centre.

"This," said my latest informant, "may lead to the discovery of the murderer. Jean Mosqueau is already visiting the jewellers' shops to find out from which and by whom a ring with a chariot-wheel device was purchased."

"Who is Jean Mosqueau?"

"What, Mosqueau, our famous detective? Although his courage is well known, you would not, to look at his fair, delicate face and form, believe that he could fight a gnat!"

A week later I was aboard the steamer, bound from Calais to Dover. Among the passengers I beheld one whose face looked familiar to me. I was not long in recognizing this person as the same I had seen in front of the Hotel Windsor, and who had first informed me of the murder of the Countess. He was certainly a very handsome man, although his conceited air was a blot upon his good looks. He moved languidly hither and thither, turning his brown eyes admiringly upon the pretty lady passengers, while stroking his whiskers with one white hand, upon the middle finger of which was a superb diamond ring. I am rather of a suspicious nature, which, combined with a lively imagination, had often led me into singular errors. Now, a strange impulse moved me to advance and hold out my hand to the man whom I had involuntarily disliked from the first, in order that I might have a chance to glance at his ring. Somehow the idea possessed me that I should discover a chariot wheel device upon the glittering bauble. The stranger did not at first recognize me. He soon did, however, and frankly extended his left hand, which was not the one containing the ring. My brain fairly reeled; the man's behavior was a confirmation of my suspicions.

"The other hand, if you please," I said, in a low, stern voice.

"Monsieur will please excuse me; my other arm is lame with the rheumatism."

He beheld me glance toward the half hidden ring, and I was sure I saw him start and turn pale, at the same time looking much surprised. He, however, opened his right hand, as if perfectly willing for me to shake it if I chose to. Then I had a good look at the ring, and felt ashamed of my suspicions. The device was a common heart, which certainly bore no resemblance to a chariot wheel. After a general conversation to recover my self-possession, I turned away, resolved in the future to have a better opinion of my fellow creatures. The stranger's good looks seemed to attract the attention of a good many of the ladies. One especially, a modest-looking little thing attired in black, kept directing furtive glances at the handsome passenger. Finally she glided so close to him that in turning he brushed against her. An apology, smilingly received by the little lady, a remark about the weather on the part of the gentleman, and the two were soon conversing with animation. Meanwhile the blushing cheek and bright eyes of the fair one seemed to betoken that she was well pleased with her companion, whose air was more conceited than ever.

"I am afraid we shall have a storm," she remarked pointing toward a dark cloud upon which the captain of the boat was gazing anxiously.

"We may, but do not be alarmed, madame."

With an air of nonchalance he pulled a red cigar-case from his pocket and asked his companion if she objected to a smoke. Then he started, and quickly returning the red one to his pocket pulled forth another of a blue color.

"How many cigars do you smoke in a day?" inquired the lady, evidently amused at the sight of two cases.

The other colored, and it struck me that his voice slightly faltered and his hand trembled as he made some laughing reply. Soon the storm came pouncing down upon us. We were midway in the Channel, so that we caught the full force of the sea and gale. Both were terrific. The sea swept the boat, which lay so far over that her machinery was soon damaged so that it would not work. The wind, screaming like a demon, threw her over still farther. Suddenly we observed the sailors endeavoring to loosen a long boat on the davits at the stern. Meanwhile, there was an ominous grinding, smashing noise under the counter. The truth could not be concealed; we were sinking.

The ladies screamed; the handsome passenger lost his self-possession, and ran hither and thither. The cool behaviour of the little lady in black contrasted strangely with the agitated demeanor of those around her. There she stood, calm and immovable, her bright steel-blue eyes fixed upon the handsome stranger, of whom she did not lose sight for a moment.

"Keep quiet, ladies and gentlemen!" sang out the captain—"Keep quiet, and don't crowd around the boat so! There will be room in it for you all; and, besides, there is a schooner coming to our assistance," pointing to a vessel blowing toward us before the wind.

There was, however, a panic among those addressed. The moment the boat was lowered, into it they all bundled, among them the handsome passenger. A huge sea coming along roaring like thunder, parted the tackles, tearing the boat from the steamer before the lady in black or I could enter it. The handsome passenger, losing his balance, fell over the gunwale, and being unable to swim willdy threw up his arms. I must acknowledge that I was so engrossed with the perilous situation of my fair companion and myself—now the only two left aboard the steamer—that I paid little attention to the drowning man. The steamer was in fact, going down fast—was already nearly engulfed in the stormy waves, her heated and half submerged boilers hissing as the steam came gushing out like a spout of whale. I was advancing to throw an arm around the little lady, fearing to see her washed away, when, quietly motioning me back with one hand, she seized a coil of rope and threw the end to the handsome passenger. He caught it, when turning to me, the lady requested me to help haul the man aboard. I complied, marvelling at the love and devotion thus shown by a woman to an acquaintance of an hour. His power over the female sex must be great, I thought. He is conceited, but not without reason. The idea flashed clearly across my mind in spite of my danger. The schooner, however, was very near, and I had reason to believe that we should be picked up.

I was right. We were all taken aboard the schooner, the handsome passenger among the rest. Then the lady in black pulled forth a revolver, pointing it at the head of him whom she had rescued.

"Out with that red cigar-case?" she said sternly. "I would like to see what monsieur carries in it."

"Why—why," stammered the stranger; "what is—"

Before he could say another word, the little Amazon thrust her disengaged hand in his pocket, pulled forth the red cigar-case, and opening it, a ring dropped to the deck. The ring she picked up, and holding it up before us all, exclaimed:

"I have found it at last. The jeweller assured me it was the only one of the device in Paris—a chariot wheel! This person is the murderer of the Countess de Marville."

The handsome passenger stood as if frozen to the deck, making no resistance as the lady in black slipped a pair of handcuffs over his wrists.

"By what right," he then stammered, "do you——"

He paused as the other threw off her dress and false hair, revealing the person of a slender man with girlish features.

"I am John Mosqueau, the detective!" he quietly remarked, "and I robbed the sea of this man that the scaffold might not be cheated."

There was little more to add. The main proof having been obtained, other proofs on the prisoner's trial were brought forth, showing him guilty beyond doubt. Long before his execution his name was ascertained to be Louis Rossenau, a noted adventurer and gambler, who, however, by cool effrontery and winning address, backed by his good looks, had been enabled to move among the first circles of Parisian society.

—If you wish to know whether it is going to storm or not, remarks the Winsted Herald, all you have to do is to find the storm vortex and see which side of it is the most moist. Multiply this by the square of latent heat, subtract the time of day, and divide by the weather cock. The result will be the rarification, plus the thermometric evolution of the North Pole—and then a waytaringman, though a natural knownothing, can tell what will follow. How wonderful, and yet how simple is the economy of nature!

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1873.

Readables.

The yellow fever is decreasing at Memphis and the prospect is quite hopeful.

A large portion of the town of Canastota, N. Y., was destroyed by fire, Monday, causing a loss of $150,000.

Antonio da Silva, assistant keeper of the Guid lighthouse near the rocks known the Boca do Infernus, Portugal, is in luck. On the 2d inst., the Queen of Portugal and her sons were walking on the beach of Mexilhoeiro and were washed overboard. Silva rushed to their rescue and brought them safely to shore. As a consequence, Silva has the honor of the "order of the Tower and Sword" conferred upon him, receives a gift from the Queen of £100 and will be promoted to a more remunerative post.

Advices from Germany state that Theodore F[illegible] in this country, and brother of Carl Formes, the celebrated basso, committed suicide on account of disappointment in love.

It does not take them long in Virginia to tell what the matter is with the Ohio election. They merely mention that "Old Bill Allen has got Virginia blood in him." That is all they care to know about it.

Official returns in Pennsylvania give Gorpon (republican) for Supreme Court Judge, a majority of 14,294, and Mackey, for State Treasurer, 25,352.

A member of the Missouri Legislature, stopping at a St. Louis hotel, awoke from a sleep of peace to find his pantaloons gone and the bell-wire broken. He starved until four o'clock in the afternoon, when the terrific shrieks of a chambermaid on the lower floor brought out the authorities. They found him wrapped in a coverlid, and explained to his perturbed mind that a maid was not just the person to borrow pantaloons of. He is hunting for the fellow that did it, with two revolvers and a bowie.

A Kalamazoozer named Godfrey poked himself into the knuckle-joint of a shaft, which wound him up at the rate of 200 revolutions per minute. Being a short man, the execution was rapid.

One of the most curious of larks was entered upon by four well-known New York brokers. While riding up Broadway in a Madison-avenue stage, they set fire to the straw, which filled the stage with smoke and then blazed furiously. The driver stopped the stage and assisted the police in putting out the fire and locking up the hilarious money-dealers.

It is considered a notable fact that nearly all the aldermen of Houston, Texas, can read and write.

A colored man is acting Mayor of Oil City, Penn. The curious way in which he has attained this high distinction is described by the Erie Dispatch thus: "The elected Mayor, Mr. Sowers, having been elected to the office of County Treasurer, his resignation gives to the Councilman having the highest number of votes an opportunity to step into his official shoes, and this devolves upon Miles Green, a colored man, who, it is said, owes his election principally to the democrats, who voted for him with the idea that they were perpetrating a first-class joke."

The majority for Allen (dem.) for Governor of Ohio is 817.

In the Superior Criminal court at Boston, George Doran, convicted of maliciously kicking a dog, and thereby breaking its leg, was fined $75 and costs.

It is told of one of the "supes" who removes chairs from the stage of a Troy theatre with great effect, that on the death of Edwin Forrest being announced to him, while standing on a hotel stoop, he exclaimed with dramatic gesture: "Great God! another one of us gone!"

The Boston Globe has come to the conclusion, since the recent elections, that the indifference of majorities is an evil more injurious than the tyranny of majorities to the cause of political honesty and reform. It seeks to show the importance of a more direct and vital interest than is felt at present by the Republicans throughout the country in the success of the party, and suggests that the danger is that the existing indifference will increase until important issues go by default, and the party learns too late the evil of tampering with its duties and opportunities. The remedy for the evil, it says, must be found in a better appreciation of the duties and responsibilities of the citizen and until the people are educated up to the point, it fears that we shall have to bear this reproach and the danger of the very unsatisfactory state of things at present existing.

Novel Cottage.

A Boston gentleman has built a house of native stone on the old Crawford place in this State. It is regularly split and laid in parallelograms, the ends overlapping at the corners of the house, somewhat as logs do in a log cabin. Much better than the hard cold look of most of our split or faced granite is the uniform, deep, warm brown color which he has secured for his first story, by his careful and judicious selection among the exhaustless quarries of the everlasting hills. The roof which surmounts this irregularly shaped mass of rooms, verandas, bow windows, and porticoes, carved, as it were, out of the solid side of the mountain, is a very high-peaked, Swiss-looking structure of wood, broken everywhere with Lutheran windows, and furnishing sad rooms enough for an attic above the chambers. The work is a little gem in its incomparable setting, and must have been a constant delight in the planning and building.

—An Iowa preacher said in his sermon, Sunday: "Religion in the heart, my friends, is like four aces in the deck; without it no man can hold a certain hand."

State News.

The Manchester Union says that (last year) slavery being dead, "Mr. Greeley and his friends and the democrats agreed upon all other questions." Did Mr. Greeley then abandon his protection doctrine, or did the democratic party abandon its free trade professions—or, was free-trade as dead as slavery?

Miss Sarah F. Baldwin of Antrim committed suicide on Sunday last, by hanging.

It is rumored that the Manchester mills are to stop their woollen work within two weeks and discharge some twelve to fifteen hundred hands.

Jocosity in Journalism.

[New York Independent.]

English journalists are beginning to write in that semi-jocose vein of irony into which we long since fell in this country, when discoursing of railroad accidents. In recording a recent accident, caused by the impact of a passenger train against a wandering bullock, the Pall Mall Gazette says:

"The public, however, inured to the incessant slaughter of the last month, will think little of an accident in which only two adults and one infant in arms met their deaths."

Indeed, that inexplicable law which has so often seemed to cause a succession of accidents in this country has apparently gone into effect in England. Several collisions and other mishaps resulting in a shocking loss of life have recently occurred on some of the best-managed roads. Considering the surprising tardiness which English railroad managers evince in adopting some of the simplest means of safety used in this country, it is strange that they have so long escaped the consequences of their obstinacy.

The atmospheric brake is almost unknown on their roads, and the very simple device of a signal cord seems to have been entirely neglected. In consequence of this last omission, the occupants of a car which took fire a few days since when the train was in motion were quite unable to make known their frightful situation. Moreover they were, according to the universal practice, locked, nor could they, owing to the compartment structure of the cars, pass from one to the other. It was only, therefore, when they began to throw themselves from the windows that their predicament was discovered. Several of them sustained severe injuries, and it is a wonder that none were killed outright. We have, of course, nothing to brag of in the way of immunity from accidents, but we may safely say that were it not for our countless mechanical contrivances, our reckless railroad men would have a much longer list of murders on their consciences than is the case at present. It only remains now for a competent gang of Western borderers to cross the ocean and waylay a train, let us say on the Great Northern line out of London, and our English cousins will be educated up to an adequate idea of the perils of railway travel.

The "Late Rose" Potato.

[Bridgeport (Conn.) Repub. Standard.]

"This is a new variety which is just being introduced into public favor, and deserves a creditable mention. It was first produced by Messrs. Stickney & Noble, practical seedsmen, of this city, from a ball of the Early Rose. In flavor, color and shape it is nearly an exact imitation of that potato, but presents a smoother surface, and is about three weeks later. As a winter and spring potato it has no equal, being free from rot and retaining its flavor long after other varieties become nearly tasteless. It does not sprout in the cellar until quite late in the spring, yet shoots up readily upon being planted. Its yield can be fairly estimated by the following fact: One year ago last spring, Mr. E. O. Cole, of this city, bought of the above firm two of their first seedlings and sent them to his brother-in-law, Mr. Oliver Berry, Greenland, N. H., who planted them among other varieties on ground prepared without dressing. They yielded in the fall five pecks of large, handsome potatoes. These were kept during the winter in a cellar, where other varieties rotted badly, yet in the spring these were found to be entirely sound. Last spring Mr. Berry planted the entire lot, on broke up ground, and with only a little plaster in the hill as dressing, and where, unfortunately, they were shaded part of the day by trees. Notwithstanding this, however, they yielded this fall 35 bushels of large, marketable potatoes, very uniform in size, some of them weighing two pounds each. Their yield was found to be one-third greater than the Early Rose variety which were planted in the same field and in richer soil."

Mr. Cole is well-known in this city, having been connected with the Western Union and International offices here for a series of years. He writes us that any one desiring to plant the "Late Rose" may procure the potatoes of Mr. Oliver Berry, Greenland depot.

Financiering Extraordinary.

[Providence Journal.]

The views of Andrew Johnson are of uncommon importance at this crisis. The man who invented the great plan of paying the national debt by enacting that it was fully discharged when the aggregate payment of interest equalled the principal sum, can never speak in vain to an intelligent audience of American citizens. This plan has the great advantage for the present two-per-cent.-a-month times, that the debt would disappear with uncommon rapidity.

Mr. Johnson's present advice is not altogether financial, but largely constitutional. He thinks that there has been no constitutional government since he left the White House, and that there was not much during the latter part of his stay there. It is his opinion that "a wise and just prince" would be an improvement upon a President and a Congress elected by the people, and carrying on the government as at present. He does not designate the coming prince, but by showing how wise and just he himself is, he furnishes the materials from which Nasby could describe, or Nast could draw him.

The Weather.

[Danbury News Man's Almanac.]

I shall not say anything here about the importance of this subject.

We all know how unbearable society would be without it; how tame and commonplace would become heaven and earth in its absence.

I merely wish to call the attention of the reader to the care that has been taken in selecting the weather for this book.

Being warned by last season I have put in plenty of rain, which will be found to arrive just in the nick of time.

I have dealt lightly in thunder storms; I find they are not popular; and I have such an antipathy to lightning-rod men that I lose no opportunity to injure them.

I have been rather liberal with snow, for the sake of the young and the livery stables, and have put in some extraordinary hail, for the encouragement of the oldest inhabitant, and a little frost, to stir up the amateur in tobacco and other varieties of cabbage.

But accuracy is the strong point of the volume. When it says, "Look out for rain," then is the time for you to "bump yourself" for the house. And when it says, "Frost," any delay in getting your wife's father's coat over the tomatoes and dahlias will prove eminently disastrous to those articles. Yes, I have aimed to be accurate, looking more to the personal comfort and general information of my patrons, than to the plaudits of a wicked world, and gold, which perish in a day. I am told.

I have not lost sight of the fact that I have a formidable and unscrupulous opposition at Washington. But trusting to an honest purpose, a discriminating public, and eight years of promiscuous trusting as the editor of a country newspaper, I shall press steadily on, and hurt that Washington chap. Yours in confidence, BAILEY.

The War-Dance in a Chicago Hotel.

The proprietors of the Sherman house at Chicago have been importing fun into their hotel, in the shape of a squad of Crow Indians. The Times says that these red-skins were invited to the club-room of the hotel, a few evenings ago, where a crowd of ladies and gentlemen had assembled. The Indians were satisfied to occupy one corner of the room; the others, native and foreign, took up the rest of the room, excepting a space in the centre, left for a war dance. Led by the great chiefs, Blackfoot, Iron Bull, Long Horse, Thin Belly and Bear Wolf, the Indians sang several love songs, chanted a death dirge, and shouted their war-cries in the most frenzied manner. The scalp or victory song was particularly impressive. The native Americans formed a circle in the centre of the room, stood close together and then blackguarded their enemy, whom they had just vanquished, in the liveliest manner. The song received an encore. At this moment "Long John" Wentworth entered the room, and was instantly surrounded by the chiefs. They looked at him in wondering amazement, and Thin Belly called him Mi-Tee-Big-Cus, which signifies the large tree of the forest. Before the honorable gentleman could escape they had recommenced their scalp song, and while they went round and round, dancing, hopping and chanting, "Long John" was the picture of despondency. It was the first ring that he was ever in which he disliked.

A Two Hundred and Fifty-three Feet Drop.

The Rockville Republican relates an escape from death that is almost incredible: Nelson Whitemarsh and Patrick Congan are employed in the shaft of the Union Coal Company, of La Salle. A few mornings since, having stepped upon the cage to descend, after having the signal all right, the drum around which the cable runs, and which at the time was somehow disconnected from the other machinery, began to revolve rapidly, and they knew that they were riding to perhaps a horrible death. They struck the bottom, a distance of 253 feet, and breaking through the three-inch planking, were plunged in the sump, which contained about ten feet of water. Wonderful to relate, neither of them was killed, but coming to the surface they clambered upon the boards. The car which was ascending at the same time they were going down, reached the surface with awful momentum, and tore through the upper works and wrecked nearly everything in the immediate vicinity. Assistance was sent below and the injured men brought to the surface, where a vast crowd of people assembled. They were carried home and medical aid summoned. Whitemarsh sustained a fearful concussion on the hip, and is bruised in several other places. Congan was not so seriously injured. No bones were broken, and hopes are entertained that with proper care they may recover.

Miracles.

If any one wishes to understand the nature and miraculous cure of the disease of Mrs. Sherman, of Piermont, recently, let him send to Boston for Dr. Walter Channing's pamphlet on bed cures and their history and treatment, or look in to the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal, Vol. 63, pages 72, 92, 112, 134 and 152, to be found in most physicians offices.

The Danbury News tells the following: A lady on North Main street saw something on her carpet on Saturday morning, and, hunting up an old paper, placed it over the object, carefully lifted it, went to the back stoop and dropped in the slop pail—a pair of gloves. She says she doesn't see anything very amusing about this, but it seems as if her husband would split himself over it.

—The graduates of South Hadley female seminary are accustomed to make triennial reports to their respective classes of their condition and prospects. One item has respect to their matrimonial affairs. One young lady reported that she was not yet engaged, but that she saw a cloud above the horizon as large as a man's hand.

Business Notices.

A Disabling Disease.

No disease which does not confine a man to his bed so completely unfits him for business as dyspepsia. When the stomach is foul, the brain is always muddy and confused, and as the cares and anxieties of life are a sufficient burden for the organ of thought to bear, without being tormented by the miseries born of indigestion, it is highly desirable for the brain's sake, as well as for the sake of every other portion of the system, that the disordered stomach should be restored with the utmost dispatch to a healthy, vigorous condition. This object can always be accomplished by a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the purest and best of vegetable specifics, which evacuates the morbid humours through the bowels, rouses and tones the torpid stomachs and regulates the liver, imparts firmness to the nerves and clears the sensorium of its mental cobwebs. Persons subject to attacks of indigestion, bilious headache, irregularity of the bowels, sickness at the stomach, or "the blues," should take the Bitters once or twice a day throughout the present season.

A TRIUMPH OF MEDICAL ART.

Yes, a triumph we call it, when medicine can be so "fixed up" as to be pleasant to take and yet accomplish the object intended. Such a medicine is Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets, samples of which the writer procured and tested in his own family. The Pellets (little pills) are about one-fifth the size of an ordinary pill, made of highly concentrated root and herbal extracts, and sugar-coated.—Frankfort. (Ind.) Weekly Cresent. 7d.

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS,

For all the Purposes of a Family Physic

CURING

are the most congenial purgative yet perfected. Their effects abundantly show how much they excel all other Pills. They are safe and pleasant to take, but powerful to cure. They purge out the foul humors of the blood; they stimulate the sluggish or disordered organ into action, and they impart health and tone to the whole being. They cure not only the every-day complaints of everybody, but formidable and dangerous diseases. Most skillful physicians, most eminent clergymen, and our best citizens send certificates of cures performed, and of great benefits they have derived from these Pills. They are the safest and best physic for children, because mild as well as effectual. Being sugar-coated, they are easy to take; and being purely vegetable, they are entirely harmless.

Solicitor Frink for State; P. Webster Locke for respondent.

Michael Constantine, of Seabrook, for selling liquor was tried, found guilty, and fined $50 and costs—and sent to House of Correction at Brentwood. Frink for State, Hodgdon for respondent.

Death of Mrs. Timothy Paul.

The St. Joseph (Mo.) Gazette of Oct. 22d records the death in that city, on the 21st inst., of the widow of Timothy Paul. She was attacked with pneumonia, from which she suffered six days. Her friends in this city will recognize the truth of the tribute paid her memory by the Gazette, which says: More than forty years she has been a consistent christian, and in her life and death exemplified the faith which she professed. Even up to the last hours of her life she was cheerful and patient, receiving any little attentions with thankfulness, and always striving to conceal her sufferings, lest they might give pain to those she loved.

Mrs. Paul leaves four children in St. Joseph, one in Boston, and one in Bristol, Connecticut. Those residing in St. Joseph are Mrs. C. E. Caneday, Miss C. M. Paul, C. W. Paul and George E. Paul. Her eldest son, Dr. J. Fletcher Paul, resides in Boston, and her youngest son, Henry K. Paul, in Bristol.

The Death of Mrs. Fernald.

[Kellogg (Iowa) News, Oct. 23d.]

Mrs. Fernald, wife of G. W. Fernald, of this place, died on Monday morning of this week, after a few days' illness. Mr. Fernald was away at the time of her death attending to the building of his elevator at Indianola. We understand that she has suffered for sometime, from a chronic disease, and was subject to such attacks occasionally, and it was thought would soon recover, but her time of life was ended, and she has gone to try the realities of another and better world. She leaves a family to mourn the loss of a loving wife and a dear mother. Many friends join in sympathy with them in their bereavement.

Laconics.

Schooner Tennesee, Pillsbury, from Hoboken for this city ran ashore in the lower harbor near Fishing island and will probably have to discharge part of her cargo in lighters before she can be got off.

Mr. Edward de Anguera, the well-known piano tuner, who has always given satisfaction here, is in town and is ready to promptly attend to all orders left at Preston's for tuning. We cordially greet him and recommend him to the public.

The Tirrell-Bickford Case.

A New Hampshire correspondent of the Springfield Republican writes: "Who does not remember the trial of Albert J. Tirrell for the murder of Maria Bickford in Boston twenty-eight years ago, when Rufus Choate, the counsel for Tirrel, spoke twenty-four hours, by his marvellous eloquence gaining the acquittal of the murderer. The husband of the unfortunate woman, who loves her still faithfully, has been the subject of inquisitive interest in West Conway, where he formerly resided. He treasures every article he could ever regain belonging to her, even to the white slippers besmeared with her blood, and those are packed in a large box and trunk with her wax statue, which he purchased from a travelling Mrs. Jarley. Over these musty things he will pore for hours, and is always glad to display them or talk of her, for the trouble cut deep and left permanent traces observable to any one. He has most of her letters, for she kept up a correspondence with him in the midst of her sinning, to which he responded, hoping always to win her back. In one letter she expresses her wish to return if he will allow her the companionship of Albert Tirrell. In spite of his infatuation, he refused the shameless request. At last, wearied with sin, she prepared to return unencumbered. To prevent it, it is alleged, Albert J. Tirrell crept into her room at night, found her sleeping and cut her throat. Over this the husband constantly laments, saying that if he had gone after her she would not have been murdered, as he could have protected her. They had one child, which fortunately died, but the baby shoes and trinkets are preserved with her things."

Portsmouth readers will remember the mob which escorted Tirrell from the court house to the Eastern depot, after he had been discharged on a charge of robbing a sailor at this station, many years ago.

The Ohio election intoxicates the democracy and sobers the republicans throughout the country. It decides that the democracy will stand in its old tracks in 1876, to be buried again under majorities like those of '68 and '72.

COAL.

HAVING contracted for a quantity of the above coal, we would call the attention of Manufacturers, Dealers and Consumers to the following different grades mined and controlled by the Company:

HARD WHITE ASH COAL,
FREE BURNING WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN RED ASH COAL,
NORTH FRANKLIN COAL,
LYKENS VALLEY COAL.

In order that all coal shall be shipped in good order, a most rigid system of inspection, both at the mines and at the shipping ports, will at all times be enforced. In every district of the coal region there will be appointed a number of competent persons skilled in the preparation of coal, as local inspectors, whose duty it will be to visit the several collieries daily to see that a proper force is at all times employed in removing slate, and to prevent, if possible, any coal being sent from the mines in bad order. In addition to these efforts at prevention, no means will be left untried at the shipping ports to cure the evils of careless preparation. At Schuylkill Haven, Port Clinton and Port Richmond, ALL COAL WILL BE SUBJECTED TO THE PERSONAL EXAMINATION OF A SKILLED INSPECTOR BEFORE IT IS SHIPPED, and if condemned by him, will be dumped in places provided for the purpose, and before being loaded into vessels WILL BE THOROUGHLY RE-PICKED AND CLEANED BY HAND.

We keep a fine stock of the above coal on hand, also

LEHIGH, WILKESBARRE, PITTSTON

Portsmouth Chronicle.

Another Story.

We have been called upon by a citizen of Kittery, who says it is evident an item recently published in the CHRONICLE referred to him, as he is the only fish-dealer in that town, and the only person who recently escorted two marines into a church when a wedding was being or was about to be solemnized; and he earnestly denies the correctness of the statements made, so far as the language attributed to the fish-dealer and the presumed motive for it are concerned. He says he knew nothing of what was to take place in the church until a few minutes before he entered it, and after he had proffered the hospitalities of his pew to the two marines, who were well dressed, sober, and behaved with perfect decency and propriety; that he intended to leave the church as soon as he had shown them into his pew, (as he was in his usual working dress and on his way to his place of business to finish cleaning a large lot of fish commenced before supper,) and would have done so but for the many persons advancing up the aisle; that his clothing was not "redolent" of his calling at all; that he did decline to vacate the pew when requested to do so by the sexton, as the pew was his own and he could see no other in which he could obtain seats, but that he refused in courteous language and a quiet tone; and that lastly, that he had no intention or thought of annoying any person whatever by anything he did or said on the occasion.

'73 REUNION.

THE "HISTORY OF THE RETURN OF THE SONS & DAUGHTERS OF PORTSMOUTH, JULY, 1873," is just published. It contains 96 pages, octavo, and is a thorough detail of everything relating to the three Festal Days,

The Reunion, July 4th,
High School Reunion, 5th,
The Praise Meeting, 6th;

and containing a

Verbatim Report

of every speech that was uttered at the Tent on the 4th and 5th, besides giving a full report of all the Reunion preliminary movements in Portsmouth, Boston and New York. Much of the matter of this work has never yet appeared in any form, and we think it will prove interesting to all who participated in the Three Days' Jubilee.

The work is for sale at the Chronicle Office, J. H. Foster's Bookstore, and at Wm. R. Preston's.

The Singer Still Triumphant!

At the Vienna Exhibition, the SINGER received the Medal of Merit, the Medal of Progress, and three other Medals for superiority of productions. These are the highest Sewing Machine Awards at Vienna. The SINGER received all the medals awarded to either of the competing machines, and two medals more than any other obtained. Then, in the name of Truth, what is it that prompts people to claim recommendations for the Diploma of Honor? The fact is, no Diploma of Honor has been given to any Sewing Machine Company.

But immeasurably more valuable is The World's Award as shown by sales—proved by sworn returns to the owners of the principal Sewing Machine Patents—which last year amounted to TWO HUNDRED AND NINETEEN THOUSAND, SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHT (219,758) machines, nine out of ten of them being for Family Use. This is over 45,000 more Sewing Machines than were made by other companies during the same period, and over One Quarter of all the machines sold in 1873. These enormous sales are owing to the long-tried merits of the Singer Machines, which meet the wants of the public in superiority and simplicity of construction, and capability for great variety and excellence of work. That the users of Sewing Machines find these desirable qualities in the Singer beyond all others, is shown by the sales above given, aside from the awards of International Juries, either at home or abroad.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, DROPSY AND HUMORS.

PERUVIAN SYRUP

Makes The Weak Strong.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the system. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building upon an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

AMERICAN & FOREIGN PATENTS.

R. H. EDDY,
SOLICITOR OF PATENTS,
For Inventions, Trade Marks or Designs.
No. 76 STATE ST., OPPOSITE KILBY ST., BOSTON,

After an extensive practice of upwards of thirty years, continues to secure patents in the United States; also in Great Britain, France and other foreign countries. Caveats, Specifications, Assignments, and all papers for Patents, executed on reasonable terms with dispatch. Researches made to determine the validity and utility of Patents of Inventions, and legal and other advice rendered in all matters touching the same. Copies of the claims of any patent furnished, by remitting one dollar. Assignments recorded in Washington.

No Agency in the United States possesses superior facilities for obtaining Patents or ascertaining the patentability of inventions.

All necessity for a journey to Washington to procure a Patent and the usual great delay there, are here saved inventors.

TESTIMONIALS.

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse. CHARLES MASON, Commissioner of Patents."

"I have no hesitation in assuring inventors that they cannot employ a man more competent and trustworthy and more capable of putting their applications in a form to secure for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office.
EDMUND BURKE,
Late Commissioner of Patents."

"Mr. R. H. EDDY has made for me over THIRTY applications for Patents, having been successful in almost every case. Such unmistakable proof of great talent and ability on his part leads me to recommend ALL inventors to apply to him to procure their Patents, as they may be sure of having the most faithful attention bestowed on their cases and at very reasonable charges.
JOHN TAGGART."

[Tinsley's Magazine.]

I am not less a devil-worshipper than the rest of my species; but I hate muscular depravity as I admire intellectual rascality. Dick Turpin I have always despised. A man who could only escape for a time, and at the cost of a noble "Black Bess," was not worthy the name of thief. Were I Lord Chamberlain, I should be very hard upon the Jack Sheppard drama. To exalt the brainless dare-devil villain above the calculating systematic scoundrel is an insult to our progress and enlightenment. A man who does all and more than a Dick Turpin could do, gets a flattering postscript put beneath his name on his tombstone, and leaves a good round sum to his rejoicing friends, is a rascal that obtains my profound respect. There is all the difference between the objects of my aversion and respect that exists between a blundering donkey that breaks into my garden, tramples down my geraniums, and escapes by his heels or calmly takes a cudgelling for his misdemeanor, and a subtle fox, whose crime is only known by the scattered feathers of another martyred goose.

The most admirable devil of my acquaintance is a Picture of Health. When I first knew him, he lived in a alley adjacent to our house, and within pea-shot of our upper window. This window was the coolest and airiest place one could find in the summer time, and the fact relative to distance was impressed upon me with wearying tautology. As soon as I had perched myself on the sill with a book, that interesting boy would appear at his window with a tin tube in his mouth, looking like a monumental cherub with a fractured trump. The Picture of Health was the son of a weasoned, care-worn little laundress—a restless, eager, anxious little woman, with a strenuous expression in every line and action of her body. He was as unlike her as a fine, full blown cabbagerose is to the briar it grows upon. My mother was the first to call him "the Picture of Health," which she did in an envious tone, as she looked from his ruddy chubbiness to my sallow flabbiness. We were about of an age when we first became acquainted, and that age was six—a period of life when we least regard social distinctions.

"What'er you got in your pocket?" were the first words he spoke to me.

"I've got a fourpenny-bit in my pocket that my gran'ma's given me," I replied with some pride.

"I don't believe you've got a fourpenny-bit in your pocket that your gran'ma's given you," he remarked.

I pulled the silver out and displayed it; he hastily took it from my hand and transferred it to his own pocket. Instead of returning it, as I desired, he proceeded to corrupt my innocent mind.

"My mother's got a great copper that she biles close in," he said, "and it's full er bilin' water. Do you know the sweep?" I did know the sweep, and dreaded him with a paralyzing fear. I faltered an assent, and he continued: "That sweep is my friend," (I found afterwards that this was fiction) "and if you don't tell your gran'ma you gave me the fourpenny bit, I'll make the sweep put you in my mother's bilin' copper." I avoided the Picture of health after that; but it happened that when I again saw him, it was to be once more a sufferer by his delinquency. By going out of my way down a by-street in returning from school I could refresh myself, after the fatigues of study, by looking at the cakes in a confectioner's window. My eyes were the only organs that indulged in these luxuries; for I was bilious, and my father forbade them me, and I was so ugly a child that my aunts and uncles had for me no bowels of compassion. But I used to spend delightfully sad half-hours in looking at the delicacies, and seeing them disappear down the throats of little boys not bilious nor ugly. Just thus in later days, rejected as a partner, I have stood in happy agony watching my divinity smiling and whirling in another's arms.

This day business was dull at the confectioner's. Nobody was sitting on the tall cane chair, and the confectioner's young lady was not scooping the patties out of their pans. I noticed that fat new buns had replaced the buns of yesterday, and observed that the ginger-cake, with the piece out of the side, had not gone off; and then I became conscious that somebody else was observing the shop's contents. I could not mistake that ruddy, chubby little face. It was the Picture of Health. His little twinkling eyes were working restlessly, and in their pink fat beds appeared to me like the shining carwig that one finds in a ripe apple. He looked all over the shop, up and down the street, at me, across the road, and at a tin of pies on a chair half a yard from the door, all in a moment; and this he continued to do for some minutes, but always his surveys terminated at that tin of pies. At last he put his left hand on the door-post, advanced one foot on the threshold, and bent forward; the fingers of his right hand moved nervously, and his lips began to twitch in an extraordinary manner. Suddenly, with a movement swift and noiseless, his hand slashed at the pies and he was gone. But the baker's man, who evidently had been on the watch, the next instant, had sprung across the shop, and darted round the corner. The delinquent was presently brought back by the collar, howling dismally. Meanwhile the baker's young lady had appeared, seized me by my hair, and conveyed me into the little back parlor at the back of the shop. It was very small, very hot, but scented with such an exquisite odor of caraway-seeds, that for one ecstatic moment I forgot everything but that. The baker's young lady, whom previously I had conceived to bear a striking resemblance to the figure of Justice set over the shop-front of Mr. Bugall the scale-maker, was for sending home the Picture of Health with a tart on his promising to repent, and taking me to Bridewell for a contaminator of youthful virtue; but the baker's man, whose sense of justice was not so biassed by the contemplation of rosy cheeks and infant tears, boxed the Picture's small ears for some minutes before giving him his liberty. His punishment was severe; but shortly after I envied him his speedy expiation. Turning to me, the baker's man ordered me to empty my pockets; I eagerly and hastily obeyed, delighted to prove my innocence to him and the crowd who surrounded the shop-door. "Ah," said he, "it's just as I thought, he hasn't got hapn'y and yet he's been prowling outside the window this half-hour. Why you're always outside; I've watched you over and over again. What do you come mouching outside for, hey?" I answered him truthfully, that I came to look at the tarts—that's all. Every one laughed but—I began to cry. But I couldn't weep prettily, as the Picture of Health could; I always made my face ten times uglier by the performance. Those two wicked assistants cross-questioned me for an interminable period, and my answers seemed to convince the crowd of my guilt. For I pertinaciously refused to tell my name, fearing that my father's knowledge of my ignominy would bring his gray hairs with sorrow to the grave. At last they let me go with a punishment similar to that of my youthful acquaintance, but supplemented by some vicious slaps from the confectioner's young lady. In a thoughtful moment that evening I detected a moral as well as physical likeness between her and Mr. Bugalls' figure of Justice; I saw the symbol of prejudice in the handkerchief over the eyes of Justice, which prevented her seeing what she was about with her scales.

The Picture of Health I often saw after this. His brazenness astounded me. There was in his face and ways no sign of remorse or contrition for his past wickedness. I wondered whether he was right in his head. He too saw me, but he did not cultivate my acquaintance. Probably I did not look very pleasant or companionable; anyway, he confined himself to shooting peas at me. My mother had occasion to change her laundress, and employed the little woman in the alley to wash the linen. Then I got a further insight of the character of her son. When his name was mentioned, the little woman constantly said that he was a good boy—a very good boy; and from her manner in saying this I began to think that perhaps he had inherited his habit of lying from her—just as my yellowness was a disagreeable exaggeration of my father's pallor. The little woman was a widow, and her dear Billy (the Picture of Health) was the only living soul she had to care for (she said, "who cares for me;" but I make the inversion as being rather more truthful.) She dressed so poorly, and lived so frugally, that we once wondered what she could do with all her money, for she worked from early morning until late at night. She certainly was indulgent to her Billy, for that youth was seldom seen without a seasonable delicacy in his hand and mouth. And she was careless, frequently having to replace some article she said she had scorched or lost. Billy grew apace, and still remained the picture of health. His cheeks were round and rosy, and his jacket and other garments admirably filled. How he ever learned to read and write, I don't know; but certainly he did not at school. His mother said she could not spare him. This weakness greatly exasperated my mother, who, I believe, would have had nothing to do with a woman so culpably weak had it not been for the pitiful anxiety that expressed itself in the many lines about the poor little woman's face. One day she came to our house, looking paler than usual, and asked if a little place could be found for her Billy—a little place where he would be treated kindly, and—. My mother would listen to no more, and accused the little woman of pursuing a course with reference to her son that must inevitably make him selfish and bad, and relieved herself of certain opinions she had long pent up. At first the little laundress answered only with tears, but there followed a confession that forever altered my mother's opinion of her. She admitted that her Billy was in the habit of taking things, that she was his slave, and that she could no longer endure her thraldom. He procured from her everything he wanted by threatening to steal it publicly. She could hide nothing from him. If there was nothing else, he stole the linen and in some mysterious way disposed of it. To get a "little place" for an assistant of this kind was no easy matter; to recommend him for a trustworthy servant would be as disastrously kind as supplying gunpowder for a useful fuel. The poor mother herself was too honest to recommend him. However, the difficulty was removed by the Picture of Health finding a little place for himself. Our laundress now appeared radiant, her cheeks began to plump, and the lines in them and her forehead became less definite; she was cheerful, delighted and happy. Her Billy was quite another boy; he came home at night and started to business in the morning like a man, and he was a dear good fellow, and she felt that Heaven had answered her widow's prayer. The next thing that happened was this—the Picture of Health found for himself another situation. This time it was in the dock of a police court, and he received such a character from his late master, that the worthy magistrate before whom he stood was induced to offer him a temporary "little place" at Pentonville, with constant employment and everything found him. But in consideration of his mother, who stood trembling and red-eyed near her son, and in consideration of his looking the picture of health, his acceptance of the "little place" was not insisted upon. So the next day found him cheerfully shooting peas at me; so did I. The little laundress beat over her wash-tub day after day, and the brief sunshine went forever out of her eyes, and her back seemed as if it only once again would unbend. Yet she never spoke an ill-word of her sorrow, never spoke of him but in kindness, with motherly excuses. Sometimes she took his sins upon her own poor head—God knows the sins she had committed she had expiated with bitterest suffering and cruelest self-punishment—always she expressed hope that he would yet become a good man. I believe it was this hope that kept her from madness. To her eyes alone was there anything in her Billy's behavior, to encourage hopefulness. I used to think that somehow the wrong body must have been given to his soul, and that if he had been a pig his mother's hopes would have been realized, and she would have had her care compensated by seeing a first-class medal awarded to her son at some agricultural show for his fatness, fairness, and general inutility. He ate always, and grew and grew. When both hands were not required in feeding, one warmed itself in his trousers-pocket. At last his mother fell ill. Health is a capricious lover, that attends mostly those who seeks his attendance least; fond of bright looks, straight limbs, and glowing cheeks, he refused to have anything to do with the little woman, so old and withered and shrunk and bent had she become with her thirty years of existence in this flowery world. When she was no more to be seen arching over her work at that back window, I wondered how it would go with her son; but when in the evening I met him, and noted that he had both hands in his pockets, I wondered no more. The next day he was placed again before the magistrates, for his very first serious attempt at getting a living at the expense of an actual stranger was attended with ill success. His appearance again saved him from the ignomy of correction; he was humanely sent away for reformation. The parochial authorities removed the little laundress to the hospital, and there she lay stricken and speechless, until kinder death removed her to another world, where broken hearts are healed.

I believe that the Picture of Health was really reformed in the institution to which he was sent, and that he turned over a new leaf altogether. He was of an age to learn and to profit by experience; and the thing he learned was this: His legs could no longer be trusted; that last affair with the preservers of public property had shown them to be his superiors at running. He was too fat for muscular depravity. To get on in the world at all he must pursue a course less impeded by unpleasant obstacles than that which had terminated in a dict of plain character, and limited in quantity. His mother, too, had played him false; on such reeds he must no longer lean his heavy weight—his own happiness and comfort forbade it. So he reformed himself. The flowers of repentance he doubtless suffered not to bloom unseen, and the sweet odor thereof very likely he wafted into the nostrils of the appreciative. Otherwise I know not how he could have risen to the eminence at which, when we met again, some three or four years later, I gazed up at him. About this time I was seeking daily bread in return for my valuable services. I succeeded in obtaining a situation in a Manchester house of business as foreign correspondent. I was to share the duties with another clerk; that clerk I discovered was my quondam acquaintance, the Picture of Health. I knew him directly, and he knew me, but we were both wise, and kept our little knowledge to ourselves—the very best thing we could do with the dangerous commodity. He was unaltered except in height (he was taller than I am;) but his eyes seemed more than ever restless and like earwigs. I found him still a robber; but he robbed legally. He took nothing that could be found in his pockets. He robbed me. I say it rather in sorrow than in boast. I am a modest man, and careless about trifles. In a subtle way he contrived to appropriate all the praise attending our joint efforts, and to transfer to my shoulders all the blame. I hadn't the imprudence to show that some of the praise was mine, nor the energy to show that at least some of the blame was his; so at the end of the year he went up a step in the firm, and I went out of it altogether and opened a career in London. Now, I thought, and indeed hoped, our connection would cease; but we were linked by Fate, and three years after we again came in contact. My residence was in a small suburban village. Every face was familiar, and few incidents occurred unknown to me or to any other of our little community. We had a village belle and coquette, and not a heart amongst us had escaped her witcheries and cruelty. She jilted us all round one after another; some of us went up and were vanquished again and again. One whom every one knew as Mr. Brookes' Joe was thought to be the belle's favorite; certainly he had been plucked more often than any of us. He took his abasement with the equanimity that accompanies familiarity with misfortune, and a dogged resolution to try again. Such men generally take their degrees at last. Whenever our beauty had no one else to persecute, she lured Mr. Brookes' Joe to her feet; and there complacently he grovelled. His varying fortunes were expressed by his whistle; for though Joe could not be considered a musical genius, (he could whistle but one tune, and that "Pop goes the weasel,") he put such expression into his tune that his siffilation was more conclusive than words. He had been whistling so long in a major key that I thought he never again would whistle in the minor, and I presaged happy things for Mr. Brookes' Joe; but one morning as I was running to the train, I met him with his basket on his arm, (Mr. Brookes was a grocer,) and he was whistling his only air very flat, in hymn-like time, with melancholy turns. It was the most funereal whistling I ever heard, and doleful to a degree. I knew what had happened, and was only curious to know who occupied the shoes he lately had been whistling in. That evening my curiosity was gratified, but not I. In new ribbons, and her very sauciest smirk, the belle passed me leaning languishingly on an arm of speckless cloth, and looking bewitchingly into her lover's little eyes. Again I recognized the liquid depths at the bottom of those wells of fat. It was the Picture of Health. Both saw me, and both would have passed; but I chose that they should not. I stepped in their way and greeted them as old friends, passed a remark upon the weather, and made my old acquaintance promise to call upon me before catching the last train to the city. The train leaves at 10:10; at 10:05 he had not fulfilled his vow; so I put on my hat, ran down to the station, and just as the train was moving on, jumped into the same carriage with the Picture. We had a little talk and arrangement before I left him to walk home, in consequence of which we met the following evening at the house where dwelt the parents of our coquette. There my old friend made a solemn declaration of his intentions, which were of the most honorable character, and begged the hand of our coquette. He was rich—had become partner in the firm I had left. I knew he had robbed his way up to that position; but that was no business of mine. I felt I had done my duty when I left him that evening, with the nearest approach to a scowl on his amiable features that I had ever seen there.

In the course of time, there were three disappearances in our village. First the Picture of Health vanished; then, Mr. Brookes' Joe's whistle permanently ceased to make itself heard; and finally, our beauty left our village in shame and grief. The firm to which I have alluded had dissolved, and the partner we wanted was abroad. We were not rich enough to buy justice. So the Picture of Health and his promises were but a memory cursed by all save she who had suffered by them. If I had the knack of writing sentiment, I might make a long article out of her woman's grief and forgiveness and unreasonable love. Of the latter there was a faint counterpart in Mr. Brookes' Joe, who would have made her a wife, and have become a father to her child. But she was as constant now as she had been fickle and frivolous before. Perhaps she refused to link Joe's fate with hers from a feeling of rectitude, possibly from a lingering hope that the false one would yet come to redeem himself. Anyway Joe carried about his basket of groceries in silence.

Last week, as I was passing St. ——'s Church, a bridal company were stepping from their carriages. The bridegroom had come up only a minute before the bride, so I had the felicity of seeing both the happy young people. Once more the Picture of Health was before me. Had I been less lethargic and opposed to "scenes," I should have walked up the aisle in a melo-dramatic style, and there and then have forbidden that marriage, thereby making myself appear a hero to some and a fool to others; as it was, I merely asked a coachman to come and drink at my expense and tell me who these happy young people were, and where they were going this fine spring morning. The coachman was communicative, and told me that the gentleman was awful rich with speculating or something, and that the lady too was awful rich, though a bit plain to look at, and that they were going to have breakfast at No. 1 So-and-so Square. It seemed very hard that so old an acquaintance should not have bidden me to his marriage-feast, in which he must have known I should feel interested. I felt it must be his memory that failed him rather than his affection; therefore, to relieve his mind from the affliction the knowledge of his neglect might afterward occasion, I determined to attend his breakfast unasked and be an uninvited guest. I thanked the coachman and bade him farewell, and quickly made my way to So-and-so Square. I found no difficulty in getting admittance, and when we all went in to breakfast the confectioner's man (how he reminded me of old times!) slipped me into a seat between two ladies, as if the arrangement had been made beforehand. Being, as I have said a modest man, I was so overpowered by a sense of my own temerity that for some time I knew nothing—a feeling I imagine an unblooded soldier must experience when for the first time he sees nothing between himself and the enemy; and with just the courage that comes to him in that position was I presently nerved. I opened a brisk conversation with the ladies on either hand, and swallowed whatever food was set before me, perfectly regardless of the fearful consequences. After a time I lifted my eyes from my plate and looked about me. Very little removed from me on the opposite side of the table sat the happy man. He, too kept his eyes on his plate. His cheeks were pale looking, as if those radiant apples had turned up their nether side. Of course he had seen me. I was happy in my jokes, and the ladies beside me, being single and tolerably advanced in years, were appreciative and pleased to laugh consumedly. Laughter is catching—especially on such an occasion, where silence is sometimes broken by a whispered conversation that verges on the melancholy. I became the funny man of the table. I saw all eyes but the earwig ones; they resolutely avoided me.

Said one of the ladies: "Oh, Mr.—er?"

"Nemesis," I said.

"Mr. Nemesis,—what an odd name!—have you known the bridegroom long?"

"From his innocent boyhood; and you?"

"But lately, I have known the bride from her girlhood."

I was delighted; nothing I said would be wasted. What the bridegroom did not hear directly from me, he would indirectly through his wife.

"What a trying occasion this must be!"

"To some; but the happy bridegroom has had more disagreeable trials than this."

He dropped his fork.

"How well he has borne them!"

"Men of strong moral principles do not permit themselves to be agitated by the unavoidable misfortunes that happen to themselves or to other people."

"He has never told us of these trials."

"He is so modest."

"Such modesty is a great virtue."

"Except when it excludes a wife or a wife's friend from that confidence, without which marriage cannot be perfect happiness."

"Did you know the family?"

"I knew his mamma extremely well. She loved her son with a fervor and depth rare even among mothers. Her last breath formed these words: 'My son.'"

"Was he present?"

"No; he did not know of her death till after. He had an appointment under the government, and at the time was occupied in the onerous duties of his office."

"How shocking! Tell me of his other trials."

"Yes, when I propose the bridegroom's health."

I looked across the table. The happy man's nether lip hung bloodless on his chin, displaying his teeth like a dog that is being strangled.

"But you are not the 'best man.'"

"No, but I'm good enough for that."

I looked up again. He was speaking to a waiter.

"You will be doing so quite out of order."

"On the contrary, I shall be doing so in order—to please myself."

"I expect you are very vain of your oratory."

"When I look at the bridegroom ought I not to be proud of my species? Excuse me one moment."

The waiter gave me a folded piece of paper. It contained a second piece, a note for £50;. I looked up once more; what little expression the fat face was capable of was of abject supplication. I knew the significance of the £50; and if I had been melodramatically constituted, I should have risen and hurled it in its sender's teeth. Instead, I tumbled it about nervously in my lap until decision tardily came to me.

"You look quite disturbed," said the lady beside me.

"I have received a note."

"A nice note?"

"The very nicest—a fifty pound note. It is from the bridegroom."

"How odd!"

"Would you like to know why he sent it?"

"Oh, no; ha, ha!"

"Very well, then—you shall. The note is a desire that I should spare his blushes, and forego my little biographical oration. The money is half of a little annuity he allows a poor friend of mine—a little broken-hearted woman with a child."

"And shall you forgo your speech?"

"Well," (a sigh) "I suppose I must. One cannot have one's way with these dreadfully charitable people."

Hardships and sufferings come to all of us in one way or another. If we have been guilty, we call it retribution. The Picture of Health had been guilty, and his retribution came to him in a disarrangement of his feeding apparatus and a swelling of the legs; my doctor tells me this. His wife is a virago and a tyrant; so I hear from my wife. I know he is wretchedly miserable; this I see myself when I call on his wedding-day for the never-failing annuity.

A little daughter of Mr. Joseph St. Pierre of Hamlin Plantation, Me., was killed a few days since by falling down stairs with an open knife in her hand.

Mooney's block in Newburyport, a three-story brick building, which was gutted by fire last June, and which was being repaired, fell, Tuesday morning, with a terrific crash, filling the street with the debris, but injuring no one, though one of the side walls broke over an adjoining one-story building. As it was foul weather the hands were not at work.

It is estimated that the saw-mills on the Connecticut to be supplied from Coos the coming winter will require a stock of 45,000,000 of lumber. To get this amount, with what will be manufactured at Groveton, Stark, Milan, Berlin, Whitefield, and the large amount run to Bethel and Lewiston from this country, will keep lumbermen active till spring.

Penning a Pig.

[Danbury News.]

Two families in Slawson have had an experience somewhat similar to that suffered by Mr. Cobleigh several weeks ago. These families live in a double house, and each had a pen with two pigs. Last Friday the woman in one part discovered that her two pigs were free from their pen, and looking after geological specimens at the foot of the yard. She also discovered at the same time that the gate to a cabbage-yard adjoining was open, and that the pigs might at any moment become ravished by a view of the glories within. Her husband being away, she hurriedly secured the gate, and then set about to return the truants by the following ingenious plan: Taking a shovelful of corn, she approached as close to the animals as possible, and, holding the tempting morsel near enough for them to learn its inviting character, she screwed her face into an expression of winning sweetness, and backed slowly toward the pen. It was a beautiful illustration of woman's faith, and we regret to write that it did not work. The pigs took one snuff at the contents of the shovel, just to show that they took some interest in the matter, and, being convinced thereby that there was nothing injurious in the experiment, fell to rooting about again with renewed fervor. The nearer the woman came to the pen the straighter her face grew, and presently lost every vestige of solicitude, and assumed instead an expression of medium ferocity. What she may have done will never be known, as at this juncture her husband made his appearance on the back stoop, and, her eye resting upon him, she commenced to apostrophize him in the language married people alone are adepts at. After requesting somebody to show him the idiot who had let those hogs out, that he might punch his head, he drove straight at the truants, and missed them, of course. Then he drove at them again with a clothes pole, and missed them again, although he made another pole by hitting that on a stone. Any one who has helped to drive one or two pigs will readily understand the number of articles that passed through the air, and the style of conversation the man kept up during the chase. Finally, he got one of the animals in a corner, and, being by this time utterly regardless of personal appearances or consequences, threw himself upon the brute, neatly scraping the fence with the top of his head, and falling upon the pig in such a way as to hold in abeyance every one of his muscles except those in the throat. These were at once put in active operation, and the man for a moment thought he had captured a planing-mill. Then he raised himself slowly, keeping a tight hold of the animal, and getting on his feet, and the pig in his arms, struck out for the pen, preceded by his wife and the other woman, and closely and anxiously observed by all the neighbors for a half mile around. In this way the procession laboriously moved, the pig, having worked its head to within two inches of the man's ear, was pouring therein a tale of unparalleled distress, which, if not calculated to melt the stoutest heart, actually threatened to split open the stoutest head. The man was utterly powerless to remedy the horror, having both hands engaged, and could only twist his ear a little out of range, and scream at the top of his voice his plans for the future of "them hogs." On reaching the pen, and while in the act of dumping the howling viper over the side, the woman next door made an unfortunate discovery. Their hogs were in the pen; the truants were hers. The man, who was still holding the pig, and might have, with reason, taken a prominent part in the debate, contented himself by merely expressing a hope that he might be damned, and then trudged around to the other pen, where he arrived after much unlooked-for tribulation, and again hoisted the howling monster up to the top, when the woman next door made another and still more remarkable discovery. Her pigs were in their pen. "What's that?" screamed the man, who was so fixed he could not very well see into the pen, and was obliged to lift his voice to make himself heard above the din. "Them ain't my pigs," screamed the woman. "Why ain't they?" he yelled. "Cause my pigs are here," she shrieked back. It is needless to say that the strange animals were urged out of that garden without the use of subterfuge.

"A Dose in Time," &c.

If "a stitch in time saves nine," it is equally certain that a dose of a healthy tonic like Hostetter's Stomach Bitters taken at this inclement season of the year may save many an unpleasant twinge. A dose, however, is not sufficient. The system should be thoroughly charged with this genial vegetable stimulant and invigorant. Commence taking it with the commencement of the atmospheric changes which distinguish the winter from the autumn. Thereby you will avoid those disturbances of the digestive and secretive organs, and those painful diseases of the muscles and the nerves of sensation, which often render the period of the year which should be the merriest, a season of penance and disquietude. The extraordinary vigor and regularity which this exhilarating restorative imparts to the most important functions of the body, render it an invaluable remedy for nervous debility, constipation, indigestion, torpidity of the liver, and intermittent fevers.

A TRIUMPH OF MEDICAL ART.

Yes, a triumph we call it, when medicine can be so "fixed up" as to be pleasant to take and yet accomplish the object intended. Such a medicine is Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets, samples of which the writer procured and tested in his own family. The Pellets (little pills) are about one-fifth the size of an ordinary pill, made of highly concentrated root and herbal extracts, and sugar-coated.—Frankfort. (Ind.) Weekly Crescent. 7pl.

Laconics.

The Old Farmer's almanac for 1874 is for sale by Moses Bros. and at all the bookstores.

The jury in the case of Otis A. Cate found him guilty of setting fire to Hayes' barn, and Judge Foster sentenced him to hard labor in the State prison for twelve years.

The Odd Fellows of this city have not forgotten their suffering brethren in Memphis, but have sent $65 forward. Piscataqua Lodge, No. 6, and New Hampshire Lodge, No. 17, each gave $25, and Osgood Lodge, No. 48, $15.

It isn't every farmer who is so fortunate as Mr. William Henry Brackett, of Greenland, who churns his cream by water power. He carries the cream down to his cider-mill and sets it churning. When the butter comes the mill stops running.

A notice has been posted at the Kearsarge Mills stating that "in consequence of the present state of the market and the depression in business, that corporation is compelled to either stop the Mills wholly or in part, or reduce the wages of the help. The latter course is believed to be the best for all concerned, and has been decided upon."

The Athlete Base Ball Club, of Kittery, on Tuesday evening gave a complimentary ball to the Minie Base Ball Club of South Berwick, in return for a similar compliment extended to the Athletes by the Minies some little time ago. Harlow's Quadrille Band furnished the music, and Trefethen's Hall was filled with a merry party up to a late—or rather, an early hour, the assembly breaking up before breakfast time. The affair was an entire success, and the South Berwick boys expressed themselves as greatly pleased with the manner in which they were entertained.

The Stratham farmers complain of the presence of half a dozen deperate chracters who make their home in the woods and spend the day time in the vicinity of Great Bay. They call at farm houses and demand food, milk cows and steal chickens. Recently they entered the barn of Mrs. George Weeks at Bayside and cut up a valuable robe from which they made moccasins. Indications of their presence at Stratham depot were noticed recently, and they probably spent the night there. It is said that they are deserters from the receiving ship Sabine.

Beer on Water.

[Dover Democrat, 27th.]

The last two or three weeks have brought the news of various disasters at sea; but one happened last Saturday afternoon, close by this good city, which was truly heart-rending, or came so near answering to that description that it will pass under that head. Capt. Moses Young started from Portsmouth in a whaleboat with a full cargo of eighteen barrels of ale. He went along as glib as could be until he reached "half tide rock," just above Dover Point, where the craft suddenly made a lurch, "dipped water," and went down. The captain and his mate, the only persons on board, caught the oars, by which means they kept afloat until Aaron Pinkham, Joseph Fernald and Geo. A. Roberts, seeing the condition they were in from the shore, put off as fast as they could in a boat and picked them up. It was a narrow chance for the Captain and his man, but they all right now. But the worst part of it all is to come. That ale went swimming all round in the most reckless sort of style, as if very anxious to mingle itself with nature's foaming brine. Some of it went over to Eliot, some down toward Kittery bridge, some up the Piscataqua, and a lot of it put for Nancy Drew's shore in Newington, where it was hastily fished out by the railroad men, hoisted into Nancy's barn, and then followed a royal Sunday drunk in that secluded spot of the earth. No such grand supply ever reached that happy shore before, and such another lot of boozy bipeds as might have been seen rollicking through that barn, and then snoozing off the effects of that overdose of malt potations, were never known before in that quarter. The stuff belonged, we understand, to Eldredge & Co. of Portsmouth, and it was consigned to our Dover market. We suppose that Dover can manage to get along without it, as the Lord is raining good water to-day.

A Sketch of Stokes.

A reporter present at the third trial of Stokes in New York last week says of his demeanor and physical condtion:

To those who have watched Stokes day by day for the past twenty months—it is fully that since he was arrested in the Grand Central Hotel on the night he shot Fisk—may not have been able to trace the changes in his appearance. But the writer, who was supping at the Grand Central cafe at the moment Fisk was shot, and left a friend to witness the arrest of the assassin and recount it for the ever yawning columns of a morning newspaper, was staggered this morning by the terrible change that has taken place in Stokes. There is no longer about him the degage air of the young man about town which he was born to and never affected; which clung to him all through his first trial and well nigh to the close of the second. Then his appearance used to say as plainly as words: What! hang me? Impossible!" Now, after the verdict of the last jury, he fidgets, he turns his eyes imploringly to jurors, he looks appealingly at the Judge. His whole appearance reminds one of a high spirited dog that has been severely whipped. He crouches, he glances furtively, he is afraid.

But Stokes' physical condition is even more terribly altered. The plump, well-fed look has left him, his collars are too big for him, and the cords of his neck start out as he looks this way and that, fatal evidence of a fatal disease. In truth, Stokes is stricken with consumption, and his long confinement in the Tombs has brought the hand of death down upon him. A year or two down South, or in Italy or France, might possibly bring back the glow to his cheek, and the life to his eye; but not, probably. Stokes is doomed, whether he dies or not.

COAL.

HAVING contracted for a quantity of the above coal, we would call the attention of Manufacturers, Dealers and Consumers to the following different grades mined and controlled by the Company:

HARD WHITE ASH COAL,
FREE BURNING WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN WHITE ASH COAL,
SHAMOKIN RED ASH COAL,
NORTH FRANKLIN COAL,
LYKENS VALLEY COAL.

In order that all coal shall be shipped in good order, a most rigid system of inspection, both at the mines and at the shipping ports, will at all times be enforced. In every district of the coal region there will be appointed a number of competent persons skilled in the preparation of coal, as local inspectors, whose duty it will be to visit the several collieries daily to see that a proper force is at all times employed in removing slate, and to prevent, if possible, any coal being sent from the mines in bad order. In addition to these efforts at prevention, no means will be left untried at the shipping ports to cure the evils of careless preparation. At Schuylkill Haven, Port Clinton and Port Richmond, ALL COAL WILL BE SUBJECTED TO THE PERSONAL EXAMINATION OF A SKILLED INSPECTOR BEFORE IT IS SHIPPED, and if condemned by him, will be dumped in places provided for the purpose, and before being loaded into vessels WILL BE THOROUGHLY REPICKED AND CLEANED BY HAND.

'73 REUNION.

THE "HISTORY OF THE RETURN OF THE SONS & DAUGHTERS OF PORTSMOUTH, JULY, 1873," is just published. It contains 96 pages, octavo, and is a thorough detail of everything relating to the three "Festival Days,"

The Reunion, July 4th,
High School Reunion, 5th,
The Praise Meeting, 6th;

and containing a

Verbatim Report

of every speech that was uttered at the Test on the 4th and 5th, besides giving a full report of all the Reunion preliminary movements in Portsmouth, Boston and New York. Much of the matter of this work has never yet appeared in any form, and we think it will prove interesting to all who participated in the Three Days' Jubilee.

The work is for sale at the Chronicle Office, J. H. Foster's Bookstore, and at Wm. E. Preston's.

The Singer Still Triumphant!

At the Vienna Exhibition, the SINGER received the Medal of Merit, the Medal of Progress, and three other Medals for superiority of productions. These are the highest Sewing Machine Awards at Vienna. The SINGER received all the medals awarded to either of the competing machines, and two medals more than any other obtained. Then, in the name of Truth, what is it that prompts people to claim recommendations for the Diploma of Honor? The fact is, no Diploma of Honor has been given to any Sewing Machine Company.

But immeasurably more valuable is The World's Award as shown by sales—proved by sworn returns to the owners of the principal Sewing Machine Patents—which last year amounted to TWO HUNDRED AND NINETEEN THOUSAND, SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY-EIGHT (219,758) machines, nine out of ten of them being for Family Use. This is over 45,000 more Sewing Machines than were sold by any other company during the same period, and over One Quarter of all the machines sold in 1872. These enormous sales are owing to the long-tested merits of the Singer Machines, which meet the wants of the public in superiority and simplicity of construction, and capability for great variety and excellence of work. That the users of Sewing Machines find these desirable qualities in the Singer beyond all others, is shown by the sales above given, aside from the awards of International Juries, either at home or abroad.

IRON IN THE BLOOD.

DYSPEPSIA, DEBILITY, DROPSY AND HUMORS.

PERUVIAN SYRUP

Makes The Weak Strong.

The Peruvian Syrup, a Protected Solution of the Protoxide of Iron, is so combined as to have the character of an aliment, as easily digested and assimilated with the blood as the simplest food. It increases the quantity of Nature's Own Vitalizing Agent, Iron in the blood, and cures "a thousand ills," simply by Toning up, Invigorating and Vitalizing the System. The enriched and vitalized blood permeates every part of the body, repairing damages and waste, searching out morbid secretions, and leaving nothing for disease to feed upon.

This is the secret of the wonderful success of this remedy in curing Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dropsy, Chronic Diarrhœa, Boils, Nervous Affections, Chills and Fevers, Humors, Loss of Constitutional Vigor, Diseases of the Kidneys and Bladder, Female Complaints, and all diseases originating in a bad state of the blood, or accompanied by debility or a low system. Being free from Alcohol, in any form its energizing effects are not followed by corresponding reaction, but are permanent, infusing strength, vigor, and new life into all parts of the system, and building upon an Iron Constitution.

Thousands have been changed by the use of this remedy, from weak, sickly, suffering creatures to strong, healthy, and happy men and women; and invalids cannot reasonably hesitate to give it a trial.

See that each bottle has PERUVIAN SYRUP blown in the glass.

EDMUND BURKE,

ENTRE NOUS.

[Laura C. Redden.]

As we two slowly walked that night,
Silence fell on us, as of fear;
I was afraid to face the light,
Lest you should see that I loved you, dear.

You drew my arm against your heart,
So close I could feel it beating near;
You were brave enough for a lover's part—
You were so sure that I loved you, dear.

Then you murmured a word or two,
And tenderly stooped your listening ear,
For you thought that all that you had to do
Was to hear me say that I loved you, dear.

But though your face was so close to mine
That you touched my cheek with your chestnut hair,
I wouldn't my lips to yours resign,
And yet—I loved you—I loved you, dear.

And all at once you were cold and pale,
Because you thought that I did not care;
I cried a little behind my veil—
But that was because I loved you, dear.

And so you thought 'twas a drop of rain
That splashed your hand? But 'twas a tear;
For then you said you'd never again
Ask me to say that I loved you, dear.

Well! I will tell, if you'll listen now.
I thought of the words you said last year;
How we girls weren't coy enough, and how
There were half a dozen that loved you, dear.

And I was afraid that you held me light,
And an imp at my shoulder said: "Beware!
He's just in a woolog mood to-night."
So I wouldn't say that I loved you, dear.

Not though I thought you the man of men,
Chiefest of heroes, brave and rare;
Not though I never shall love again
Any man as I loved you, dear.

I have suffered, and so have you;
And to-night, if you were but standing here,
I'd make you an answer straight and true,
If you'd ask again if I loved you, dear.

Prairie Fires.

A dispatch from Algona, Iowa, to the Chicago Inter-Ocean, says:—

"Yesterday, a farmer in the south part of this county, Kossuth, fired some stubble and trash to clear off his ground, that he might the better plow it. Report says that he first plowed a strip about the land before setting the fire, but the wind was at such a gale that it easily carried it over the barrier to the rank growth of dry grass, with which much of Kossuth, Hancock, Winnebago, and, in fact, all of Northwestern Iowa abounds. As the day grew apace the gale increased, and one could see in all directions the fire-fiend running as a race-horse, now bounding and jumping here and there, and sweeping everything combustible before it in its mad anger. This morning instead of vast seas of brown, dried grass, and rank growth of weeds, nothing is visible but the blackened prairie, with here and there a settler's house or homesteader's cabin less his 'Iowa stables,' grain, hay, and many a part or all of their stock. The trouble lies here: The settlements of northwestern Iowa are yet in their infancy. Many came here this year, and have seen and experienced their first fire in this one. They did not realize the strength of one of these fires, although a prairie fire, and therefore had taken little if any precaution. The frost came earlier this year, and little rain has fallen since, therefore everything is as dry as a 'powder horn,' and the grass and weeds of a greater than usual growth. The older settlers also had not taken their usual methods of barring this, one of their greatest enemies, thinking it early in the season, by plowing and mowing about their premises and stacks, and so they, with the rest, have suffered terrible losses in numerous instances, as many have lost nearly their all, and on the verge of winter. These prairie fires are grand and beautiful to behold, as like a marching army they advance, devouring as they go; but they are fearful to contemplate, when we stop to think that dotted all over these prairies, in the midst of these oceans of grass are men, women and children struggling to rear for themselves homes and the comforts of life that are destroyed."

The Prairie Fire.

[Omaha Herald, Oct. 16.]

Our readers are unfortunately somewhat familiar with accounts of prairie fires, but one occurred on Tuesday last at Wilbur, on the South Platte Division of the Omaha and Southwestern railroad, which surpasses in its terrible results any we have ever known. It was indeed a prairie fire on a large scale. It started somewhere near the Otoe Indian Reservation, southeast of Beatrice, and travelled at least twenty-five miles. The long dry grass was fitting food for it, and the flames fiercely licked it up and swept on across the prairie at an appalling rate of speed. Its route lay east of Bear Creek, and six miles east of Beatrice.

Near Wilbur, and ten miles south of Crete, this advancing avalanche of flame approached a school house filled with children. The teacher knew that the house had been provided with the usual safeguard, that it had been plowed around, and endeavored to keep the children there as the safest place. But they saw the fire coming and sprang out in a panic o run from it. Ten were overtaken, three were burned to death on the spot, three others so severely that they cannot live, and four more were terribly maimed by the fire, but it is believed that they will recover. Most of the children were little girls about seven or eight years of age, but there was certainly one boy among the sufferers, and perhaps more.

Mrs. Morey is the name of a mother who saw three of her children in the appalling situation we have described. She ran to their rescue, was herself enveloped in the flames and so terribly burned that she will not recover.

Several houses and large quantities o grain were destroyed by the fire. It spread terror throughout that section of the State, and the inhabitants turned out en masse to subdue it. Forty men went from Beatrice, Tuesday evening, for this purpose and saved some houses that were threatened, though they witnessed the destruction of a great deal of wheat which they were powerless to prevent.

Rev. De Bar, of Crete, hastened to the spot where the children were burned, and with the people of that vicinity did all that was possible to relieve them. He said he had been through the war, and had seen men maimed and suffering in almost every form, but had never witnessed a sight which so completely unnerved him as this. The school house from which the children fled is still standing, and the teacher escaped by remaining in and about it.

The Escape of Stokes.

The close of the third trial of Edward S. Stokes doubtless withdraws from public notice the young man whose pistol gave him unenviable notoriety as it sent James Fisk, Jr., to an early grave. The case is a remarkable one in this remarkable era of crime. The law's delay has been successfully invoked to save the prisoner from a legal choking. Two years has he languished in the Tombs, and his residence there has doubtless fitted him for Sing Sing. Let us hope fervently that his coming four years in State prison, "unless sooner discharged," may fit him for the grave! The believers in a state of future punishment after present existence have here an exemplification of the common faith of those opposed to the horrible doctrine, in the experience of Stokes for the past two years. Three trials for murder, once convicted, sentenced to be hanged, granted a stay of proceedings, then a new trial, with all the dismal fears of a result so earnestly wished for by his enemies—enough to punish a man for many misdeeds and cause him to wish for better training and antecedents than Stokes can boast of.

If we must hang people at all, it should be for the committal of the most horrible crimes. The murder of Fisk was bad enough and the status of society which made that murder possible is a sad one. The use of money by the friends of Stokes to secure his acquittal is natural, but the use of the same means by the friends of Fisk to secure conviction seems too much like mean-spirited revenge to pass muster among fair-minded people. Had Fisk been less a rascal and more honored, had he not bribed judges and controlled juries, had he not been thoroughly unscrupulous and capable of hiring assassins to assault persons whom he desired to be rid of, there would have been less ground for the plea of self-defence in the case of his murderer. Fisk's death appears to have been the result of his own folly, and had it not been for Fisk's high-handed outrages on law and order, Stokes might have been hanged for murder, instead of being found guilty of manslaughter in the third degree and escaping the penalty for killing a human being by serving the State for his board and clothes for a term of four years.

Readables.

The business affairs of Messrs. A. & W. Sprague of Rhode Island are reported to be in a condition which threatens the early suspension of the firm. Such a crisis would carry with it the First and Second and the Globe National and the Franklin and Cranston Savings Banks, all of Providence, and several enterprises in which the Spragues are directly concerned, but it is believed that it would cause no other suspensions.

The Taunton Gazette says that Judge Pitman recently refused to naturalize a man who had been convicted of selling liquor, saying there were enough now without adopting more.

When an enthusiastic editor describes a bride as bonny, and an envious compositor sets her up as bony, as was done at Jacksonville, hope for a season bids the world farewell, and freedom shrieks as the compositor falls at his form, brained by the brother of the blooming bride.

The New York World says Donn Piatt has returned to Washington from France, where the obtuse natives, on first hearing his name, had an unpleasant way of saying: "Donn qui?"

A little girl in Whitehall, N. Y., has developed a very singular attachment for a rat, which she regularly feeds from her hand like any other pet. Some days ago the mother of the child discovered her asleep in her cradle, with the rat perched on top of it, and brushing the flies from the face of the little sleeper with its tail.

One day last week the drama of Uncle Tom's Cabin was put for the first time on the stage at New Orleans, and has had crowded houses since. Fifteen years ago the manager who attempted to bring out such a play in New Orleans, and the actors who ventured to take the parts in it, would have had a very uncomfortable time of it. But times have changed, and prejudices have weakened; and a decade and a half have made marvelous transformations.

The Cincinnati Commercial suggests Gen. Joe Hawley, of Connecticut, for President. The country might do a great deal worse than that.

The Portland Advertiser and State have been united. The editorial staff of the Advertiser still remains the same, and Mr. Stimpson of the State will be the business manager, while Richardson of the Advertiser will be the editor-in-chief. The weekly issue will be known as the State. The new arrangement goes into effect about Nov. 1st. Other newspaper changes are talked of.

Newburyport, Mass., has a remarkable instance of filial affection. An aged gentleman from Rowley went there to visit his son, recently, taking with him a small dog to which he was much attached. His son don't see any particular points about the dog, and, not wishing to be burdened with his support, complained of his father for keeping an unlicensed dog. The old man was duly convicted and fined $20, and as that sum was beyond his pile, he was sent to jail, where he still remains.

Mr. P. T. Barnum has arrived in London. He will go at once to Paris to hold a conference with the most prominent aeronauts of Europe upon the subject of a trans-Atlantic balloon voyage, which he intends to have accomplished under his immediate supervision if any feasible plans should be presented.

Newcastle, Del., is an unpleasant place for sham amusements which travel around the country to exhibit. Last Tuesday night quite a large audience assembled there to listen to a minstrel performance, but this proved to be so miserable an entertainment that an attack was made on the performers, one of whom was thrown out of a window, and the rest had to be locked up to keep them out of the hands of the crowd.

Nothing but a pardon will make Edward S. Stokes available for the democratic nomination for the Presidency in 1876.

A circus balloonatic's air-ship burst at Newbern, N. C., and the man, falling nearly 100 feet, was badly hurt.

A Washington dispatch has it that the navy yards and arsenals of the country will be run to their utmost capacity the coming winter and until the end of the present fiscal year. Congress, it is claimed, will increase the yearly appropriations as soon as it assembles, in order to enable the Navy and War Departments to give work to thousands of men during the hard winter that is approaching.

State News.

Hunter & Co., the Hinsdale publishers, who were recently arrested for sending obscene literature through the mails, have instituted suits to the amount of $40,000 for false imprisonment, damages to business, etc., against complainants and officers concerned in their arrest.

Ruth Goss of Amherst, aged 104, is smart enough to have her portrait taken.

Several students from Dartmouth College went into the woods one day last week, hunting gray squirrels, and found a coon on a tree. They shot at it twenty-four times before it came down, and then it went for the students, and they had a long and exciting contest before they succeeded in killing it. One of them broke off the stock of a two-hundred-and-fifty-dollar gun in the contest. The coon was one of the largest ever found, weighing thirty and a half pounds.

John Keaf and Daniel D. Haley, employes of the Swampscott Machine Company, at Newmarket, went out in a boat gunning on Saturday, the 25th, and have not been heard from since. Their boat has been found bottom up with one of their dogs dead. Haley was married, 48 years old, and had six children living in Manchester. Keaf was unmarried, 19 years old, and lived in Greenland. Another account says both bodies have been found near the shore.

Conway has a peg factory which uses up 600 cords of white birch every year in making shoe peg strips.

In consequence of numerous burglaries, the Selectmen of Great Falls have called a town meeting to see if watchmen shall be employed to patrol the streets by night. No such watch has been employed since 1857.

Third Class Manslaughter.

The trial of Edward S. Stokes came to an end at 11.45, Wednesday night. The jury having been out some time returned at 10.30 for further instructions as to the difference in the degrees of manslaughter. Returning again at 11.45, the clerk asked the foreman if they had agreed on a verdict, to which the foreman replied: "Guilty of manslaughter in the third degree." The audience applauded, Stokes turned pale, then smiled and his eyes filled with tears. What his next movement is to be is not positively known, but eminent legal talent has given the opinion that many of Judge Davis' rulings will not be sustained by the court of appeals, and that the case will be carried to a higher court on exceptions taken to those decisions.

Mr. Tremaine, counsel for Stokes, made an earnest appeal to the court to take into consideration the long imprisonment and the great suffering the prisoner had already undergone. He asked that the utmost mercy should be accorded his client. Judge Davis grew angry and turning to the prisoner said: "Stokes,—the verdict of the jury has exhausted the mercy of the court. I would that the law empowered me to impose a punishment more adequate to the awful crime that rests upon your guilty head." He then sentenced him to the State prison for four years, the full extent of the statute. Stokes' friends gathered about him, kissed him, shook his hands and congratulated him, with every manifestation of delight, on the result of the trial. He was then conveyed to the Tombs, and from thence goes to Sing Sing.

—From a Paris paper is gathered the following curious journalistic intelligence: The oldest journal in the world is published at Pekin. It is printed on a large sheet of yellow silk, and appears in the same form, with the same characters, and on the same kind of stuff as that a thousand years ago. The only thing changed is the writers.

—It is pertinently asked: "How can any person with common sense (mother or servant girl) push the baby carriage toward the rays of the sun, along a whole street? It seems incredible; yet we see it every sunny day. When the baby is twenty years old, it will have weak eyes—and wonder why."

Why They Didn't Go to Church.

A writer in Good Words tells the following story of the difficulty some people meet with in endeavoring to lead a "religious life." A lady had gone to visit a young couple of the better class of the poor.
